RESPECTED SIR,

HAVE received your esteemed favour of I the 13th ultimo, whereby it appeareth, that you have perused those same Letters, the which were delivered unto you by my friend the reverend Mr. Hugo Bhen; and I am pleased to find you think they may be printed with a good prospect of success; in as much as the objections you mention, I humbly conceive, are such as may be redargued, if not entirely removed. And, first, in the first place, as touching what profecutions may arife from printing the private correspondence of persons still living, give me leave, with all due submission, to observe, that the Letters in question were not written and sent under the feal of fecrecy; that they have no tendency to the mala fama, or prejudice of any person whatfoever; but rather to the information and edification of mankind: fo that it becometh a fort of duty to promulgate them in usum publicum. Besides, I have consulted Mt Davy Higgins, an eminent attorney of this place, who after due inspection and consideration, declareth, That he doth not think the faid Letters contain any matter which will be held actionable in the eye of the law. Finally; if you and I should come to a right understanding, I do. declare in verbo facerdotis, that, in case of any fuch profecution, I will take the whole upon my own shoulders, even quoad fine and imprisonments, tho' I must confess, I should not care to undergo flagellation: Tam ad turpitudinem, quam ad amdritudinem, pana spectans .-Secondly, concerning the personal resentment of Mr Justice Lismahago, I may say, non stocci facio

Christian, if, peradventure, he deserveth that epithet: albeit, I am much surprised that more care is not taken to exclude from the commission all such vagrant foreigners as may be justly suspected of disaffection to our happy constitution, in church and state.—God forbid that I should be so uncharitable, as to affirm positively, that the said Lismahago is no better than a Jesuit in disguise; but this I will affert and maintain, totus viribus, that, from the day he qualified, he has never been once seen intratempli parietes, that is to say, within the parish church.

Thirdly, with respect to what passed at Mr Kendal's table, when the said Lismahago was so brutal in his reprehensions, I must inform you, my good Sir, that I was obliged to retire, not by sear arising from his minatory reproaches, which as I said above, I value not of a rush; but from the sudden effect produced by a barbel's row, which I had eaten at dinner, not knowing, that the said row is at certain seasons violently cathartic, as Galen observeth in his chapter 20 1280c.

Fourthly, and lastly, with reference to the manner in which I got possession of the Letters,

it is a circumstance which concerns my own conscience only; sufficeth it to say, I have sully satisfied the parties in whose custody they were; and, by this time, I hope I have also satisfied you in such ways, that the last hand may be put to our agreement, and the work proceed with all convenient expedition; in which hope I rest, refpected Sir,

your very humble servant,

JONATHAN DUSTWICH.

P. S. I propose, Deo volente, to have the pleafure of seeing you in the great city, towards All-hallow-tide, when I shall be glad to treat with you concerning a parcel of MS. fermons, of a certain clergyman deceased; a cake of the right leven, for the present state of the public. Verbum sapienti, &c.

J. D.

To the Rev. Mr JONATHAN DUSTWICH.

SIR,

RECEIVED your's in course of post, and shall be glad to treat with you for the MS. which I have delivered to your friend Mr Bhen; but can by no means comply with the terms proposed. Those things are so uncertain Writing is all a lottery—I have been a loser by the works of the greatest men of the age -I could mention particulars, and name names; but don't choose it-The taste of the town is so changeable. Then there have been so many letters upon travels lately published-What between Smollet's, Sharp's, Derrick's, Thickness's, Baltimore's and Baretti's, together with Shandy's Sentimental Travels, the public feems to be cloyed with that kind of entertainment-Nevertheless, I will, if you please, run the risque of printing and publishing, and you shall have half of the profits of the impression-You need not take the trouble to bring up your fermons on my account --- No body reads fermons but Methodists and Dissenters—Besides, for my . own own part, I am quite a stranger to that sort of reading, and the two persons, whose judgment I depended upon in these matters, are out of the way; one is gone abroad, carpenter of a man of war; and the other has been silly enough to abscond, in order to avoid a prosecution for blasphemy—I'm a great loser by his going off—He has lest a manual of devotion half sinished on my hands, after having received money for the whole copy—He was the soundest divine, and had the most orthodox pen of all my people; and I never knew his judgment sail, but in slying from his bread and butter on this occasion.

By owning you was not put in bodily fear by Lismahago, you preclude yourself from the benefit of a good plea, over and above the advantage of binding him over. In the late war, I inserted in my evening paper, a paragraph that came by the post, reslecting upon the behaviour of a certain regiment in battle. An officer of said regiment came to my shop, and, in the presence of my wife and journeyman, threatened to cut of my ears—As I exhibited marks of bodily fear, more ways than one, to the conviction of the bye-standers, I bound him over; my action lay, and I recovered.

As for flagellation you have nothing to fear, and nothing to hope, on that head-There has been but one printer flogged at the cart's tail these thirty years, that was Charles Watton; and he affured me it was no more than a fleabite. C-S-has been threatened several times by the House of L-; but it came to nothing. If an information should be moved for, and granted against you, as the editor of these Letters, I hope you will have honesty and wit enough to appear and take your trial-If you should be sentenced to the pillory, your fortune is made-As times go, that's a fure step to honour and preferment. I shall think myfelf happy if I can lend you a lift; and am, very fincerly,

yours,

London, Aug. 10.

HE

HE pills are good for nothing ___ I might as well fwallow fnow-balls to cool my reins___I have told you over and over, how hard I am to move; and at this time of day, I ought to know fomething of my own constitution. Why will you be fo positive? Prithee send me another prescription-I am as lame and as much tortured in all my limbs as if I was broke upon the wheel: indeed I am equally diffressed in mind and body-As if I had not plagues enough of my own, those children of my fifter are left me for a perpetual fource of vexation --- What bufiness have people to get children to plague their neighbours? A ridiculous incident that happened yesterday to my niece Liddy, has disordered me in such a manner, that I expect to be laid up with another fit of the gout-Perhaps. I may

I may explain myself in my next. I shall fet out to-morrow morning for the Hot-well at Briftol, Where I am afraid I shall stay longer than I could wish. On the receipt of this, fend Williams thither with my faddle-horfe and the demi-pique. Tell Barns to thresh out the two old ricks, and fend the corn to market, and fell it off to the poor at a shilling a bushel under market price. I have received a snivelling letter from Griffin, offering to make a public fubmission and pay costs. I want none of his submiffions; neither will I pocket any of his money-The fellow is a bad neighbour, and I defire to have nothing to do with him: but as he is purfe-proud, he shall pay for his insolence; let him give five pounds to the poor of the parish, and I'll withdraw my action; and in the mean time you may tell Prig to stop proceedings .- Let Morgan's widow have the Alderney cow, and forty shalings to clothe her children: but don't fay a fyllable of the matter to any living foul-I'll make her pay when the is able. defire you will lock up all my drawers, and keep the keys till meeting: and be fure you take the iron-cheft with my papers into your own custody-Forgive all this trouble from,

Mrs GWILLIM,

WHEN this cums to hand, be fure to pack up in the trunk male that flands in my closet, to be to me in the Briftol waggon without loss of time, the following articles, viz. my refe-collard neglejay, with green robins, my yellow damask, and my black velvet fuit, with the short hoop; my bloo quilted petticot, my green manteel, my laced apron, my French commode, Macklin head and lappets, and litel box with my jowls. Williams may bring over my bum-daffee, and the viol with the eafings of Dr Hill's dock-water, and Chowder's lackfitif. The poor creature has been terrible consuprated ever fince we left huom. Pray take particular care of the house while the family is absent. Let there be a fire constantly kept in my brothers chamber and mine. maids, having nothing to do, may be fat a fpining. defire you'll clap a pad-luck on the wind-feller, and let none of the men have excess to the strong-beardon't forget to have the gate thit every evening before dark .- The gardnir and the hind may lie below in the landry, to partake the house, with the blunderbuss and the great dog; and I hope you'll have a watchfull eye over the maids. I know that huffy, Mary Jones, loves to be rumping with the men. Let me know if Alderney's calf be fould yet, and what he fought-if the ould goofe be fitting; and if the cobler has cut Dickey, and how the pore anemil bore the operation. -No more at prefent, by refts,

DEAR MOLLY,

IEAVING this importunity, I fend my love to you and Saul, being in good health, and hoping to heer the fame from you; and that you and Saul will take my poor kitten to bed with you this cold weather. We have been all in a fad taking here at Gloftar-Miss Liddy had like to have run away with a player-man, and young mafter and he would adone themselves a mischief; but the 'squire applied to the mare, and they were bound over .- Miftress bid me not speak a word of the matter to any Christian foul -no more I shall: for, we fervants should fee all and fay nothing-But what was worfe than all this, Chower has had the misfortune to be worried by a butcher's dog, and came home in a terrible pickle -Mistress was taken with the afterisks, but they foon went off. The doctor was fent for to Chowder, and he subscribed a repository, which did him great service-thank God he's now in a fair way to do well--pray take care of my box and the pillyber, and put them under your own bed; for, I do suppose, Madam Gwyllim will be a prying into my fecrets, now my back is turned. John Thomas is in good health, but fulky. 'squire gave away an old coat to a poor man; and John fays as how 'tis robbing him of his parquifites .- I told him, by his agreement he was to receive no vails but he fays as how there's a difference betwixt vails; and parquesites, and so there is for fartin. We are all going to the Hot-well, where I shall drink your health in a glass of water, being,

A S I have nothing more at heart than to convince you I am incapable of forgetting, or neglecting the friendship I made at college, I now begin that correspondence by letters, which you and I agreed, at parting, to cultivate. I begin it fooner than I intended, that you may have it in your power to refute any idle reports which may be circulated to my .. prejudice at Oxford, touching a foolish quarrel, in which I have been involved on account of my fifter. who had been some time feetled here in a boardingfchool. When I came hither with my uncle and aunt (who are our guardians) to fetch her away, I found her a fine, tall girl of seventeen, with an agreeable person; but remarkably simple, and quite ignorant of the world. This disposition, and want of experience, had exposed her to the addresses of a person-I know not what to call him, who had seen her at a play; and, with a confidence and dexterity peculiar to himfelf, found means to be recommended to her acquaintance. It was by the greatest accident I intercepted one of his letters; as it was my duty to stifle this correspondence in its birth, I made it my bufiness to find him out, and tell him very freely my fentiments of the matter. The fpark did not like the style I used, and behaved with abundance of mettle. Though his rank in life (which, by the bye, I am ashamed to declare) did not entitle him to much deference; yet as his behaviour was remarkably spirited, I admitted him to the privilege of a gentleman, and fomething might have happened, had not we been prevented-In short, the business took air, I know not how, and made abundance of noise-recourse was had to justice-I was obliged B 2 to

to give my word and honour, &c. and to-morow morning we fet out for Bristol wells, where I expect to hear from you by the return of the post. - I have got into a family of originals, whom I may one day attempt to describe for your amusement. My aunt, Mrs Tabitha Bramble, is a maiden of forty-five, exceedingly starched, vain, and ridiculous .- My uncle is an odd kind of humorist, always on the fret, and fo unpleafant in his manner, that rather than be obliged to keep him company, I'd refign all claim to the inheritance of his estate. -- Indeed, his being tortured by the gout may have foured his temper, and, perhaps, I may like him better on further acquaintance: certain it is, all his fervants and neighbours in the country, are fond of him, even to a degree of enthufiafin, the reason of which I cannot as yet comprehend. Remember me to Griffy Price, Gwyn, Manfel, Baffet, and ail the rest of my old Cambrain companions. - Salute the bed-maker in my name -give my fervice to the cook, and pray take care of poor Ponto, for the take of his old mafter, who is, and ever will be,

DEAR MADAM,

HAVING no mother of my own, I hope you will . give me leave to difburden my poor heart to you, who have always acted the part of a kind parent to me, ever fince I was put under your care. - lndeed, and indeed, my worthy governess may believe me, when I affure her, that I never harboured a thought that was otherwise than virtuous; and, if God will give me grace, I shall never behave so as to cast a reflection on the care you have taken in my education. I confess I have given just cause of offence by my want of prudence and experience. I ought not to have liftened to what the young man faid; and it was my duty to have told you all that paffed, but I was ashamed to mention it: and then he behaved fo modest and respectful, and seemed to be so melancholy and timorous, that I could not find in my heart to do any thing that should make him miferable and desperate. As for familiarities, I do de, clare, I never once allowed him the favour of a falate; and as to the few letters that paffed between us, they are all in my uncle's hands, and I hope they contain nothing contrary to innocence and honour. I am still persuaded that he is not what he appears to be: but time will discover ___ mean-while 1 will endeavour to forget a connection, which is fo displeasing to my family. I have cried without ceafing, and having not tafted any thing but tea, fince I was hurried away from you; nor did I once close my eyes for three nights running. - My aunt continues to chide me feverely when we are by ourfelves; but I hope to foften her in time, by humility and fubmission, ---- My uncle, who was so dread-B 3 fully fully passionate in the beginning, has been moved by my tears and distress; and is now all tenderness and compassion; and my brother is reconciled to me, on my promise to break off all correspondence with that unfortunate youth: but, notwithstanding all their indulgence, I shall have no peace of mind till I know my dear and ever honoured governess has forgiven her poor, disconsolate, forlorn,

To Miss LÆTITIA WILLIS, at Gloucester.

MY DEAREST LETTY,

AM in fuch a fright, left this should not come fafe to hand by the conveyance of Jarvis the carrier, I beg that you will write me, on the receipt of it, directing to me, under cover, to Mrs Winifred Jenkins, my aunt's maid, who is a good girl, and has been fo kind to me in my affliction, that I have made her my confidant; as for Jarvis, he was very fly of taking charge of my letter, and the little parcel, because his fifter Sally had like to have loft her place on my account: Indeed I cannot blame the man fot his caution; but I have made it worth his while. My dear companion and bed-fellow, it is a grievous addition to my other misfortunes, that I am deprived of your agreeable company and converfation, at a time when I need fo much the comfort of your good humour and good senses but, I hope, the friendship we contracted at the boardingfchool, will last for life-I doubt not but on my fide it will daily increase and improve as I gain experience, experience, and learn to know the value of a true poor Mr Wilson? I have promifed to break off all correspondence, and, if possible, to forget him : but alas! I begin to perceive that will not be in my power. As it is by no means proper that the picture should remain in my hands, lest it should be the occasion of more mischief, I have fent it to you by this opportunity, begging you will either keep it fafe till better times, or return it to Mr Wilson himself, who, I suppose, will make it his business to see you at the usual place. If he should be low-spirited at my fending back his picture, you may tell him I have no occasion for a picture, while the original continues engraved on my____But no; I would not have you tell him that neither; because there must be an end of our correspondence I wish he may forget me, for the fake of his own peace; and yet if he should, he must be a barbarous—But 'tis impossible—poor Wilson cannot be falle and inconstant: I beseech him not to write to me, nor attempt to fee me for fome time; for, confidering the refentment and paffionate temper of my brother Jery, fuch an attempt might be attended with confequences which would make us all miserable for life-let us trust to time and the chapter of accidents; or rather to that providence which will not fail, fooner or later to reward those that walk in the paths of honour and virtue—I would offer my love to the young ladies, but it is not fit that any of them should know you have received this letter .____ If we go to Bath, I shall send you my simple remarks upon that famous centre of polite amusement, and every other place we may chance to vifit; and I flatter myfelf that my dear Miss Willis will be punctual in answering the letters of her affectionate

To Dr LEWIS.

DEAR LEWIS,

HAVE followed your directions with fome fuc-1 cefs, and might have been upon my legs by this time, had the weather permitted me to use my faddle-horse. I rode out upon the downs last Tuesday, in the forenoon, when the fky, as far as the vifible horizon, was without a cloud; but before I had gone a full mile, I was overtaken instantaneously by a ftorm of rain that wet me to the skin in three minutes --- whence it came the devil knows; but it has laid me up (I suppose) for one fortnight. It makes me fick to hear people talk of the fine air upon Clifton-Downs: how can the air be either agreeable or falutary, where the dæmon of vapours descends in a perpetual drizzle? My confinement is the more intolerable, as I am furrounded with domestic vexations. My neice has had a dangerous fit of illness, occasioned by that curfed incident at Gloucester, which I mentioned in my last .___ She is a poor good-natured fimpleton, as fest as butter, and as eafily melted_not that she's a fool___the girl's parts are not despicable, and her education has not been neglected; that is to fay, the can write and fpell, and speak French, and play upon the harpfichord; then the dances finely, has a good figure, and is very well inclined; but, the's deficient in spirit, and so susceptible and so tender for sooth! -truly, the has got a languishing eye, and reads romances .- Then there's her brother, 'squire Jery, a pert jackanapes, full of coilege petulence and felf-conceit; proud as a German count, and as hot and hafty as a Welch mountaineer. As for that fantastical animal, my sister Tabby, you are no stranger to her qualifications. ___ I vow to God, the is fometimes fo intolerable, that I almost think she's the devil incarnate come to torment me for my fins; and yet I am conscious of no fins that ought to entail fuch family plagues upon me-why the devil should not I shake off these torments at once? I an't married to Tabby, thank Heaven! nor did I beget the other two: let them chose another guardian: for my part, I an't in a condition to take care of myfelf; much less to superintend the conduct of giddy headed boys and girls. You earnestly desire to know the particulars of our adventure at Gloucester, which are briefly thefe, and I hope they will go no further: - Liddy had been fo long cooped up in a boarding-school, which, next to a nunnery, is the worst kind of seminary that ever was contrived for young women, that the became as inflammable as touch-wood; and, going to a play in holyday time. 'fdeath, I'm ashamed to tell you! the fell in love with one of the actors -a handsome young fellow that goes by the name of Wilson. The rafcal foon perceived the impression he had made, and managed matters fo as to fee her at a house where the went to drink tea with her governefs. This was the beginning of a correspondence, which they kept up by means of a jade of a milliner, who made and dreffed caps for the girls at the boarding-school. When we arrived at Gloucester, Liddy came to stay at lodgings with her aunt, and Wilson bribed the maid to deliver a letter into her own hands; but it feems, Jery had already acquired fo much credit with the maid, (by what means he best knows) that she carried the letter to him, and so the whole plot was discovered. The rash boy, without faying a word of the matter to me, went immediately in fearch of Wilfon; and, I suppose, treated him with infolence enough. The theatrical hero was too far gone in romance to brook fuch usage: he replied in blank verse, and a formal challenge enfued. They

They agreed to meet early next morning, and decide the dispute with sword and pistol. I heard nothing at all of the affair, till Mr Morley came to my bedfide in the morning, and told me he was afraid my nephew was going to fight, as he had been overheard talking very loud and vehement with Wilson at the young man's lodgings the night before, and afterward went and bought powder and ball at a shop in the neighbourhood. I got up immediately, and, upon enquiry, found he was just gone out. I begged Morley to knock up the mayor, that he might interpose as a magistrate, and, in the mean time, I hobbled after the squire, whom I saw at a distance, walking at a great pace toward the city gate in spite of all my efforts, I could not come up till our two combatants had taken their ground, and were priming their piftols. An old house luckily fcreened me from their view; fo that I rushed upon them at once, before I was perceived. They were both confounded, and attempted to make their efcape different ways; but Morley coming-up with constables at that instant, took Wilson into custody, and Jery followed him quietly to the mayor's house. All this time I was ignorant of what had paffed the preceeding day; and neither of the parties would discover a title of the matter. The mayor observed, that it was great prefumption in Wilson, who was a stroller, to proceed to such extremities with a gentleman of family and fortune; and threatened to commit him on the vagrant act. The young fellow buftled up with great fpirit, declaring he was a gentleman, and would be treated as such; but he refused to explain himself further. The mafter of the company being fent for, and examined, touching the faid Wilson, said the young man had engaged with him at Birmingham about fix months ago; but never would take his falary; that he had behaved fo well in his private character.

ter, as to acquire the respect and good-will of all his acquaintance, and that the public owned his merit, as an actor, was altogether extraordinary. After all, I fancy, he will turn out to be a run-away 'prentice from London, The manager offered to bail him for a fum, provided he would give his word and honour that he would keep the peace; but the young gentleman was on his high ropes, and would by no means lay himself under any refirictions: on the other hand; Hopefull was equally obstinate; till at length the mayor declared, that if they both refused to be bound over, he would immediately commit Wilson as a vagrant to hard labour. I own I was much pleafed with Jery's behaviour on this occasion: he faid, that rather than Mr Wilson should be treated in such an ignominious manner, he would give his word and honour to profecute the affair no further while they remained at Gloucester-Wilson thanked him for his generous manner of proceeding, and was difcharged. On our return to our lodgings, my nephew explained the whole mystery; and I own I was exceeding incenfed. Liddy being questioned on the subject, and very severely reproached by that wild cat my fifter Tabby, first swooned away, then diffolving to a flood of tears, confessed all the particulars of the correspondence, at the same time giving up three letters, which were all she had received from her admirer. The last, which Jery intercepted, I fend you inclosed, and when you have read it, I dare fay you won't wonder at the progrefs the writer had made in the heart of a fimple girl, utterly unacquainted with the characters of mankind. - Thinking it was high time to remove her from fuch a dangerous connection, I carried her off the very next day to Bristol; but the poor creature was fo frighted and fluttered, by our threats and expostulations, that she fell sick the fourth fourth day after our arrival at Cliffon, and continued fo ill for a whole week, that her life was despaired of. It was not till vefterday that Dr. Rigge deciared her out of danger. You cannot imagine what I have suffered, partly from the indifferetion of this poor child, but much more from the fear of lofing her entirely. This air is intolerably cold, and the place quite folitary .- I never go down to the well without returning low-spirited; for there I meet with half a dozen poor emaciated creatures, with ghoftly looks, in the last stage of a confumption. who have made fhift to linger through the winter, like fo many exotic plants languishing in a hot-house; but, in all appearance, will drop into their graves before the fun has warmth enough to mitigate the rigour of this ungenial foring. If you think the Bath water will be of any fervice to me, I will go thither as foon as my niece can bear the motion of the coach. - Fell Barns I am oblige to him for his advice : but don't choose to follow it. If Davis voluntarily offers to give up the farm, the other shall have it; but I will not begin at this time of day to diffres my tenants, because they are unfortunate, and cannot make regular payments :-- I wonder that Barns should think me capable of such oppression .- As for Higgens, this fellow is a notorious poacher to be fure; and an impudent rafcal to fet his fnares in my own paddock; but, I fuppole, he thought he had fome right (especially in my absence) to partake of what nature seems to have intended for common ufe-you may threaten him in my name, as much as you pleafe, and if he repeats the offence, let me know before you have need not tell you to make use of my ground; but it may be necessary to hint, that I'm more afraid of my fowling-piece than of my game. When you can can spare two or three brace of partridges, send them over by the stage-coach, and tell Gwyllim that she forgot to pack up my slannels and wide shoes in the trunk mail—I shall trouble you as usual, from time to time, 'till at last, I suppose, you will be fired of corresponding with

DEAR PHILLIPS,

I GIVE Mansel credit for his invention, in propagating the report that I had a quarrel with a mountebank's Merry Andrew at Gloucester: but I have too much respect for every appendage of wit, to quarrel even with the lowest bushoonery; and therefore I hope Mansel and I shall always be good friends. I cannot, however, approve of his drowning my poor dog Ponto, on purpose to convert Ovid's pleonasta into a punning epitaph—deerant quoque Littora Ponto: for that he threw him into the Isis, when it was so high and impetuous, with no other view than to kill the sleas, is an excuse that will not hold water—But I leave poor Ponto to his sate, and hope providence will take care to accomodate Mansel with a drier death.

As there is nothing that can be called company at the Well, I am here in a state of absolute rustication: This, however, gives me leifure to observe the fingularities in my uncle's character, which feems to have interested your curiosity. The truth is, his disposition and mine, which, like oil and vinegar, repelled one another at first, have now begun to mix by dint of being beat up together. I was once apt to believe him a complete Cynic; and that nothing but the necessity of his occasions could compel him to get within the pale of fociety I am now of another opinion, I think his peevishness arises partly from bodily pain, and partly from a natural excess of mental sensibility; for, I C 2 suppose, fuppose, the mind as well as the body, is in some cases endued with a morbid excess of sensa-tion.

I was t'other day much diverted with a converfation that paffed in the Pump-room, betwixt him and the famous Dr L_n, who is come to ply at the Well for patients. My uncle was complaining of the flink, occasioned by the vast quantity of mud and flime, which the river leaves at low ebb under the windows of the Pump-room. He observed, that the exhalations arising from such a nuisance, could, not but be prejudicial to the weak lungs of many confumptive patients, who came to drink the water. The doctor over hearing this remark, made up to him, and affured him he was miftaken. He faid people in general were fo missed by vulgar prejudices, that philosophy was hardly sufficient to undeceive them. Then hemming thrice, he affumed a most ridiculous folemnity of aspect, and entered into a learned investigation of the nature of nink. He observed, that link, or stench, meant no more than a strong impression on the olfactory nerves; and might be applied to substances of the most oppofice qualities; that in the Dutch language, flinken lignified the most agreeable perfume, as well as the nost fetid odour, as appears in Van Vloudel's translations of Horace, in that beautiful ode, Quis multa gracilis &c .___ The words liquidis perfusus cloribus, he translates, van civet & moschata gestinken; that individuals differed toto calo in their opinion of Inells, which indeed, was altogether as arbitrary as the opinion of beauty; that the French were pleased with the purid effluvia of animal food; and so were the Hottentots in Africa, and the Savages of Greenland: and that the Negroes on the coast of Senegal would not touch fish till it was rotten; firong prefumptions in favour of what is generally called flink, as those nations are in a state or of nature, undebauched by luxury, unfeduced by whim and caprice: that he had reason to believe thestercoraceous flavour, condemned by prejudice as aftink, was, in fact, most agreeable to the organs of finelling; for, that every person who pretended to naufeate the fmell of another's execuations, fnuffed up his own with particular complacency; for the truth of which he appealed to all the ladies and gentlemen then present; he faid the inhabitants of Madrid and Edinburgh found particular fatisfaction in breathing their own atmosphere, which was always impregnated with flercoraceous effluvia: that the learned Dr B ____, in his treatife on the Four Digeftions, explains in what manner the volatile effluvia from the intestines, stimulate and promote the operations of the animal occonomy : he affirmed, the last Grand Duke of Tuscany, of the Medicisfamily, who refined upon fenfuality with the spirit of a philosopher, was fo delighted with that odour, that he caused the effence of ordure to be extracted, and used it as the most delicious perfume : that he himfelf, (the Doctor) when he happened to be lowspirited, or fatigued with business, found immediate relief and uncommon fatisfaction from hanging over the stale contents of a close-stool, while his servent firred it about under his noie; nor was this effect. to be wondered at, when we confider that this Substance abounds with the felf-tame volatile faits. that are fo greedily finelled to by the most delicate invalids, after they have been extracted and lublimed. by the chymists. - By this time the company began to hold their nofes; but the Doctor, without taking the least notice of this tignal, proceeded to thew, that many fetid fubitances were not only agreeable but falutary; fuch as affafætida; and other medicinal: gums, refins, roots and vegatables, over and above burnt feathers, tan-pits, candie-fnuffs, &c. In thort be used many learned arguments to perfuade his au-C 3 dence.

dience out of their fenses; and from flench made a transition to filth, which he affirmed was also a miftaken idea, in as much as objects to called, were no other than certain modifications of matter confifting of the same principles that enter into the composition of all created effences, whatever they may be: that in the filthiest production of nature, a philosopher, confidered nothing but the earth, water, falt, and air, of which it was compounded; that for his own part, he had no more objection to drinking the dirtiest ditch-water, than he had to a glass of water from the Hot Well, provided he was affured there was nothing poisonous in the concrete. Then addressing himself to my uncle, "Sir, said "he) you feem to be of a dropfical habit, and proso bably will foon have a confirmed ascites; if I fhould be present when you are tapped, I will of give you a convincing proof of what I affert, by drinking without hefitation the water that comes " out of your abdomen." The ladies made wry faces at this declaration, and my uncle changing colour, told him, he did not defire any fuch proof of his philosophy; " But I should be glad to know (faid " he) what makes you think I am of a dropfical ha-"bit?" " Sir, I beg pardon (replied the Doctor) I of perceive your ancles are swelled, and you seem to " have the facies leucophlegmatica, Perhaps, indeed, " your disorder may be adematous, or gout, or it " may be the lues venrea: If you have any reason to " flatter yourfelf it is this laft, Sir, I will undertake " to cure you with three small pills, even if the dif-" ease should have attained its utmost inveteracy. "Sir, it is an arcanum which I have discovered, and " prepared with infinite labour. Sir, I have " lately cured a woman in Briftol-a common " prostitute, Sir, who had got all the worst symptoms of the diforder; fuch as as nodi, tophi, gum-" mata, verruce, crifta Galli, and a ferpiginous eruption,

" eruption, or rather a pocky itch all over her bo-"dy. By that time the had taken the fecond so pill, Sir, by Heaven! the was as found as my "hand, and the third made ther as lound and as " fresh as a new born infant." " Sir, (cried my " uncle peevishly) I have no reason to flatter my " felf that my diforder comes within the efficacy of "your nostrum. But this patient you talk of may not be fo found at bottom as you imagine." . It I " can't possibly be mistaken: (rejoined the philoso-" pher) for I have had communication with her three times. I always afcertain my cures in that man-" ner." At this remark, all the ladies retired to another corner of the room, and some of them began to spit. As to my uncle, though he was ruffled at first by the Doctor's saying he was dropsical, he could not help fmiling at this ridiculous confession, and, I suppose, with a view to punish this original, told him there was a wart upon his nofe, that tooked a little suspicious. "I don't pretend to be a "judge of these matters; (faid he) but I under-" ftand that warts are often produced by the dif-" temper; and that one upon your nofe feems to " have taken possession of the very key-stone of the " bridge which I hope is in no danger of falling." L-n feemed a little confounded at this remark, and affured him it was nothing but a common excrescence of the cuticula, but that the bones were all found below; for the truth of this affertion he appealed to the touch, defiring he would feel the part. My uncle faid it was a matter of fuch delicacy to meddle with a gentlemans nofe, that he declined the office-upon which the Doctor, turning to me intreated me to do him that favour. I complied . with his request, and handled it to roughly, that he fneezed, and the tears ran down his cheeks, to the no imail entertainment of the company, and particulary of my uncle, who burst out a-laughing for the

the first time fince I have been with him: and took notice that the part feemed to be very tender. " Sir. " (cried the Doctor) it is naturally a tender part; but " tore move all possibility of doubt, I will take off the wart this very night."

So faying, he bowed with great folemnity all round, and retired to his own lodgings, where he applied a caustic to the wart; but it spread in such a manner as to produce a confiderable inflummation, attended with an enormous swelling: fo that when he next appeared, his whole face was overshadowed by this tromendous nozzle; and the rueful eagerness with which he explained this unlucky accident, was ludicrous beyond all defeription .- I was much pleafed with meeting the original of a character, which you and I have often laughed at in description; and what surprises me very much, I find the features in the picture, which has been drawn for him, rather foftened than over-charg-

DEAR KNIGHT, Laster if and stand of pits I NOW fit down to execute the threat in the tail 1 of my laft. The truth is, I am big with the fecret, and long to be delivered. It relates to my guardian, who, you know, is at present our principal object in wiew. or adulted was (udictobs ve view)

T'other day, I thought I had detected him in fuch frate of frailty, as would ill become his years, and character. There is a decent fort of a woman, not difagreable in her person, that comes to the Well, with a poor emaciated child, far gone in a confumption. I had caught my uncle's eyes feveral times directed to this perfen, with a very suspicious expression in them, and every time he faw himfelf observed, he hastily withdrew them, with evident marks of confusion-I refolved to watch him more narrowly, and faw him. speaking to her privately in a corner of the walk, At length, going down to the Well one day, I met her half way up the hill to Clifton, and could not help suspecting the was going to our lodgings by appointment, as it was about one o'clock; the hour when my fifter and I are generally at the Pump-room. -This notion exciting my curioficy, I returned by a back way, and got unperceived into my own chamber, which is contiguous to my uncle's apartment. Sure enough, the woman was introduced, but not into his bed-chamber; he gave her audience in a parlour; fo that I was obliged to shift my flation to another room, where, however, there was a finall chink in the partition, through which I could perceive what passed. My uncle, though a little lame, lame, rose up when she came in, and setting a chair for her, defiring the would fit down : then he asked if the would take a dish of chocolate, which the declined, with much acknowledgment. After a fhort paule, he faid in a croaking tone of voice, which confounded me not a little, " Madam, I am " truly concerned for your misfortunes; and if this " trifle can be of any fervice to you, I beg you will " accept it without ceremony." So faying, he put a bit of paper into her hand, which she opening with great trepidation, exclaimed in an extaft, "Twenty pounds! O, Sir!" and finking down upon a fettee, fainted away Frightened at this fit, and, I suppose, afraid of calling for affistance, left her fituation thould give rife to unfavourable conjectures, he ran about the room in distraction, making frightful grimaces; and, at length, had recollection enough to throw a little water in her face; by which application the was brought to herfelf: but, then her feeling took another turn. She flied a flood of tears, and cried aloud, " I know "not who you are: but fure_worthy Sir!____ es generous Sir! ___ the distress of me and my poor "dying child! Oh! if the widow's prayer " if the orphan's tears of gratitude can ought avail " gracious Providence ! Bleffings! thower " down eternal bleffings......... Here she was intenrupted by my uncle, who muttered in a voice still more and more discordant, " For heaven's take be " quiet, Madam-confider the people of the "house-'sdeath! can't you-." All this time she was struggling to throw herself on her knees, while he, feizing her by the wrifts, endeavoured to feat her upon the fettee, faying, "Prithee good now ____ should burst into the room but our aunt Tabby! of all antiquated maidens the most diabolically capricious __ Ever prying into other people's affairs, the had (cried the) what doings are these, to difgrace your own character, and dis-" parage your family ?-" Then fnatching the banknote out of the stranger's hand, she went on-" How " now, twenty pounds !--- here is temptation with a "witness! - Good woman go about your bufiness -"Brother, brother, I know not which most to ad-" mire; your concupiffins, or your extravagance !-"Good God, (exclaimed the poor woman) shall a "worthy gentleman's character fuffer for an action "that does honour to humanity:" By this time, uncle's indignation was effectually roused. His face grew pale, his teeth chattered, and his eyes fashed Sifter, (cried he, in a voice like thunder) I vow "to God, your impertinence is exceedingly pro-" voking." With thefe words, he took her by the hand, and, opening the door of communication, thrust her into the chamber where I food, so affected by the scene, that the tears ran down my cheeks. Observing these marks of emotion, "I don't won-" der (faid she) to see you concerned at the back-" fliding of fo near a relation; a man of his years " and infirmities: These are fine doings, truly-"This is a rare example, let by a guardian for the " benefit of his pupils Monftrous ncongruous! fophiftical!" For my own part, I have had an hospital these sourteen years within myfelf, and fludied my own cafe with the most painful attention; consequently may be fupposed to know fomething of the matter, although I have not taken regular courses of phisiology, et cetera, et cetera .- In fhort, I have for fome time been of opinion, (no offence, dear doctor) that the fum of all your medical discoveries amounts to this, that the more you fludy the lefs you know .-I have read all that has been written on the Hot-Wells, and what I can collect from the whole, is. that the water contains nothing but a little falt, and calcarious earth, mixed in fuch inconfiderable proportion, as can have very little, if any, effect on the animal œconomy. This being the case, I think, the man deferves to be fitted with a cap and bells, who, for fuch paltry advantage as this spring affords, facrifices his precious time, which might be employed in taking more effectual remedies. and exposes himself to the dirt, the stench, chilling blafts, and perpetual rains, that render this place to me intolerable. MY DEAREST LETTY,

T DID not intend to trouble you again till we I should be settled at Bath; but having the occasion of Jarvis, I could not let it flip, especially as I have fomething extraordinary to communicate ____(), my dear companion! what shall I tell you? for several days part there was a Jew-looking man, that plied at the Wells with a box of spectacles; and he always eyed me fo earnestly, that I began to be very uneasy. At last, he came to our lodgings at Clifton, and lingered about the door, as if he wanted to speak to formebody. I was leized with an odd kind of fluttering, and begged Win to throw herfelf in his way: but the poor girl has weak nerves, and was afraid of his beard, My uncle, having occasion for new glaffes, called him up stairs, and was trying a pair of spectacles, when the man, advancing to me, faid, in a whifper -- O gracious! what d'ye think he faid?-" I am Wilson!" His features struck me that very moment -- it was Wilson fure enough! but fo difguifed, that it would have been imposible to know him, if my heart had not affifted in the difcovery. I was fo furprifed, and fo frightened, that I fainted away, but foon recovered; and found myfelf supported by him on the chair, while my uncle was running about the room, with the spectacles on his note, calling for help. I had no opportunity to speak to him; but our looks were fufficiently expressive. He was paid for his glaffes, and he went away. Then I told Win who he was, and fent her after him to the Pump-room; where the spoke to him, and begged him him in my name to withdraw from the place, that he might not incur the fuspicion of my uncle or my brother; if he did not want to fee me die of terror and vexation. The poor youth declared, with tears in his eyes, that he had fomething extraordinary to communicate; and asked, if she would deliver a letter to me: but this fhe absolutely refused, by my order. Finding her obstinate in her refusal, he defired she would tell me, that he was no longer a player, but a gentleman; in which character he would very foon avow his passion for me, without fear of censure or reproach Nay, he even discovered his name and family; which to my great grief, the simple girl forgot, in the confusion occasioned by her being seen talking to him by my brother; who ftopt her on the road, and asked what business she had with that rascally Jew. -She pretended the was cheapening a flay hook: but was thrown into fuch a quandary, that she forgot the most material part of the information; and when the came home, went into an hysteric fit of laughing. This transaction happened three days ago, during which he has not appeared; fo that I suppose he is gone. Dear Letty! you see how Fortune takes pleasure in persecuting your poor friend. If you should see him at Gloucesteror if you have leen him, and know his real name, and family, pray keep me no longer in suspence-And yet, if he is under no obligation to keep himfelf longer concealed, and has a real aff ction for me, I should hope he will, in a little time, declare himself to my relations. Sure, if there is nothing unfuitable in the match, they won't be fo c uel as to thwart my inclinations ____O what happiness would then be my portion! I can't help indulging the thought, and gleafing my fancy with fuch agreeable ideas; which, after all, perhaps, will never be realized-Bat, why flould I defpair? who knows D 3

what will happen ?- We fet out for Bath to morrow, and I am almost forry for it; as I begin to be in love with folitude, and this is a charming romantic place. The air is fo pure; the Downs are so agreeable; the furze, in fu'l bloffom; the ground enamelled with daifies, and primrofes, and cowflips; all the trees burfting into leaves, and the hedges already clothed with their vernal livery; the mountains covered with flocks of sheep, and tender bleating wanton lambkins playing, frisking, and skipping from fide to fide; the groves refound with the notes of the black bird, thrush, and linnet; and all night long fweet Philomel pours forth her ravishing delightful fong. Then, for variety, we go down to the nymph of Bristol spring, where the company is affembled before dinner; fo good natured, fo free, fo eafy; and there we drink the water fo clear, fo pure, fo mild, fo charming'y maukish. There the fun is fo cheerful and reviving; the weather fo foft; the walk fo agreeable; the prospect fo amusing; and the ships and boats going up and down the river; close under the windows of the pump-room, afford fuch an enchanting variety of moving pictures, as require a much abler pen than mine to describe. To make this place a perfect paradife to me, nothing is wantting but an agreeable companion and fincere friend; fuch as my dear M is Willis has been, and I hope fill will be, to her ever faithful

Bath, April 24.

DEAR PHILLIPS,

YOU have, indeed reason to be surprised, that I should have concepted my correspondence with Miss Blackerby from you, to whom I disclosed all my other connections of that nature; but the truth is, I never dreamed of any fuch commerce, till your last informed me, that it had produced fomething which could not be much longer concealed. It is a lucky circumstance, however, that her reputation will not suffer any detriment, but rather derive advantage from the discovery: which will prove, at leaft, that it is not quite so rotten, as most people imagined ____ For my own part, I declare to you, in all the fincerity of friendship, that, far from having any amorous intercourfe with the object in queftion, I never had the least acquaintance with her perfon; but, if she is really in the condition you defcribe, I suspect Mansel to be at the bottom of the whole. His vifits to that shrine were no fecret; and this attatchment, added to fome good offices which you know he has done me, fince I left Alma-mater. give me a right to believe him capable of faddling me with this scandal when my back was turned-Nevertheless, if my name can be of any service to him, he is welcome to make use of it; and if the woman should be abandoned enough to swear his bantling to me, I must beg the favour of you to compound with the parish: I shall pay the penalty without repining; and you will be fo good as to draw upon me immediately for the fum required On this occasion, I acted by the advice of my uncle :

cle; who fays I shall have good-luck if I pass through life without being obliged to make many more compositions of the same kind. The old gentleman told me last night, with great good-humour, that betwixt the age of twenty and forty, he had been obliged to provide for nine baftards, fworn to him by women whom he never faw-Mr Bramble's character, which feems to interest you greatly, opens and improves upon me every day --- His fingularities afford a rich mine of entertainment; his understanding, so far as I can judge, is well cultivated; his observations on life are equally just, pertinent, and uncommon. He affects misanthropy, in order to conceal the sensibility of a heart, which is tender, even to a degree of weakness. This delicacy of feeling, or fourness of the mind, makes him timerous and fearful; but then he is afraid of nothing fo much as of dishonour; and although he is exceeding cautious of giving offence, he will fire at the least hint of insolence or ill-breeding - Respectable as he is, upon the whole, I can't help being sometimes diverted by his little diffreffes; which provoke him to let fly the shafts of his fatire, keen and penetrating as the arrows of Teucer-Our aunt, Tabitha, acts upon him as a perpetual grindstone—She is, in all respects, a striking contrast to her brother-But I referve her portrait for another occasion.

Three days ago we came hither from the Hot-Well, and took possession of the first sloor of a lodging house, on the South Parade; a situation which my uncle chose, for its being near the Bath, and remote from the noise of carriages. He was scarce warm in his lodgings when he called for his night-cap, his wide shoes and slannel; and declared himself invested with the gout in his right soot; though, I believe, it had as yet reached no surther than his imagination. It was not I ng before he had had reason to repent his premature declaration; for our aunt Tabitha found means to make fuch a clamour and confusion, before the flannels could be produced from the trunk, that one would have imagined the house was on fire. All this time, uncle fat boiling with impatience, biting his fingers, throwing up his eyes, and muttering ejaculations; at length he burst into a kind of convultive laugh, after which he hummed a fong; and when the hurricane was over, exclaimed, " Bleffed be God for " all things!" This however, was but the beginning of his troubles. Mrs Tabitha's favourite dog Chowder, having paid his compliments to a female turn-spit, of his own species, in the kitchen, involved himself in a quarrel with no fewer than five rivals, who fet upon him at once, and drove him up ffairs to the dining room door, with hideous noise: there our aunt and her woman, taking arms in his defence, joined the concert; which became truly diabolical. This fray being with difficulty sappressed, by the intervention of our own footman and the cook-maid of the house, the 'fquire had just opened his mouth to expostulate with Tabby, when the town-waits in the paffage below, ftruck up their music, (if music it may be called) with fuch a fudden burft of found, as made him flart and flare, with marks of indignation and difquiet. He had recollection enough to fend his fervant with fome money to filence those noily intruders; and they were immediately difmiffed, though not without some opposition on the part of Tabitha, who thought it but reasonable that he should have more music for his money. Scarce had he fettled this knotty point, when a strange kind of thumping and bouncing was heard right over-head, in the fecond ftory, fo loud and violent as to shake the whole building. I own I was exceedingly provoked at this new alarm; and before my uncle time to express himself on the subject, I ran up stairs, to fee what was the matter. Finding the room-door open, I entered without ceremony, and perceived an object, which I cannot now recollect without laughing to excess-It was a dancing mafter, with his scholar, in the act of teaching. The master was blind of one eye, and lame of one foot, and led about the room his pupil, who feemed to be about the age of threefcore, stooped mortally, was tall, raw-boned, hard-favoured, with a woollen night-cap on his head; and he had stript off his coat, that he might be more nimble in his motions-Finding himfelf intruded upon, by a perfon he did not know, he forthwith girded himfelf with a long iron fword, and advancing to me, with a peremptory air pronounced, in a true Hibernian accent, "Mifter What d'ye callum, by my " shoul and conscience, I am very glad to sea you, " if you are after coming in the way of friend-" ship; and indeed, and indeed now, I believe you " are my friend fure enough, gra; though I ne-" never had the honour to fee your face before, my " dear; for because you come like a friend, with-" out any ceremony at all, at all "I told him the nature of my vifit would not admit of ceremony; that I was come to defire he would make less noife, as there was a fick gentleman below whom he had no right to difturb with fuch prepofterous doings. As the fellow did not think proper to refuse the request of fuch a fora formidable figure, he was immediately introduced, and addressed himself to my uncle in these words: "Your humble fervant good Sir___I am " not so prepasterous, as your fon calls it, but I "know the rules of fhivility-I'm a poor knight " of Ireland, my name is Sir Ullic Mackilligut, " of the county of Galway: being your fellow-" lodger, I'm come to pay my respects, and to " welcome you to the South Parade, and to offer " my best services to you, and your good lady, and "your pretty daughter; and even to the young " gentlen an your fon, though he thinks me a pre- . I would " have fooner danced a horn-pipe upon my own " head, than walk the foftest minuet over yours." -My uncle, who was not a little startled at his first appearance, received his compliment with great complacency, infifted upon his being feated, thanked him for the honour of his vifit, and reprimanded me for my abrupt expostulation with a gentleman of his rank and character. Thus tutored, I asked pardon of the knight, who, forthwith starting up, embraced me fo close, that I could hardly breathe; and affured me, he loved me as his own foul. At length recollecting his night-cap, he pulled it off in some confusion; and, with his baldpate uncovered, made a thousand apologies to the ladies as he retired ___ At that inflant, the Abbeybells began to ring fo loud, that we could not hear one another speak; and this peal as we afterwards learned, was for the honour of Mr Bullock, an eminent cow-keeper of Tottenham, who had just arrived at Bath, to drink the waters for indigestion. Mr Bramble

Bramble had not time to make his remarks upon the agreeable nature of this ferenade, before his ears were faluted with another concert that interested him more nearly. Two negroes belonging to a Creole gentleman, who lodged in the fame house, taking their flation at a window in the flair-cafe, about ten feet from our dining-room door, began to practife upon the French-horn; and being in the very first rudiments of execution, produced such discordant sounds, as might have discomposed the organs of an afs-You may guess what effect they had upon the irritable nerves of uncle; who, with the most admirable expression of plenetic furprife in his countenance, fent his man to filence those dreadful beasts and defire the musicians to practife in some other place, as they had no right to stand there and disturb all the lodgers in the house. Those fable performers, far from taking the hint, and withdrawing, treated the messenger with great infolence; bidding him carry his compliments to their mafter, Colonel Rigworm, who would give him a proper answer, and a good drubbing into the bargain: in the mean time they continued their noise, and even endeavoured to make it more disagreeable; laughing between whiles, at the thoughts of being able to torment their betters with impunity. Our 'squire, incensed at the additional insult, immediately dispatched the servant with his compliments to Colonel Rigworm; requesting that he would order his blacks to be quiet, as the noise they made was altogether intolerable To this meffage. the Creole Colonel replied, that his horns had a right to found on a common stair case; that there they should play for his diversion; and that those who did not like the noise might look for lodgings elsewhere. Mr Bramble no fooner received this reply, than his eyes began to gliften, his face grew pale, and his teeth chattered. After a moments paufe, he flipt on his shoes without speaking a word, or feeming to feel any further disturbance from the gout in his toes, -Then, fnatching his cane, he opened the door, and proceeded to the place where the black trumpeters were posted. There, without further hesitation, he began to belabour them both; and exerted himfelf with fuch aftonishing vigour and agility, that both their head and horns were broken in a twinkling, and they ran howling down flairs to their mafter's parlourdoor. The 'fquire following them half way, called aloud, that the Colonel might hear him, "Go raf-" cals, and tell your mafter what I have done; if he " thinks himfelf injured, he knows where to come " for fatisfaction. As for you, this is but an earnest " of what you shall receive, if ever you presume to " blow a horn again here, while I flay in the house." So faying, he retired to his apartment, in expectation of hearing from the West Indian; but the Colonel prudently declined any further profecution of the dispute. My fifter Liddy was frighted into a fit, from which she was no fooner recovered, than Mrs Tabitha began a lecture upon patience; which her brother interrupted with a most fignificant grin, exclaimed, "True, fifter, God increase my patience " and your diferetion. I wonder (added he) what " fort of sonota we are to expect from this over-" ture, in which the devil, that prefides over hor-" rid founds, hath given us fuch variations of difcord ____ The trampling of porters, the " creaking and crashing of trunks, the fnarling of curs, the foolding of women, the fqueaking and " fqualling of fiddles and hautboys out of tune, the " bouncing of the Irish baronet over-head, and the " burfling, belching, and brattling of the French-" horns in the passage (not to mention the harmo-" nious peal that still thunders from the Abbey-" freepla) fucceeding one another without interrup-Vol. I. tion,

This intimation was by no means agreeable to Mrs Tabitha, whose ears were not quite to delicate as those of her brother -- She faid it would be great folly to move from fuch agreeable lodgings, the moment they were comfortably fettled. She wondered he should be such an enemy to music and mirth. Her brother eyeing her alkance, "Pardon me, fifter, (faid he) I should be a a favage, indeed, were I infensible of my own felici-44 ty, in having fuch a mild, complaifant, good hu-"moured, and confiderate companion and house-"keeper; but as I have got a weak head, and iny " fense of hearing is painfully acute, before I have "recourse to plugs of wool and cotton, I'll try whe-"ther I can't find another lodging, where I shall have more quiet and less music." He accordingly difpatched his man upon his fervice; and next day he found a small house in Milsham-street, which he hires by the week. Here, at last, we enjoy convenience and quiet within doors, as much as Tabby's temper will allow; but the 'fquire still complains of flying pains in the stomach and head, for which he bathes and drinks the waters. He is not fo bad, however, but that he goes in person to the pump, the rooms, and the coffee-houses; where he picks up continual food for ridicule and fatire. To Dr LEWIS.

Bath, April 23.

DEAR DOCTOR.

IF I did not know that the exercise of your profession has habituated you to the hearing of complaints, I should make a conscience of troubling you with my correspondence, which may be truly called the lamenttions of Matthew Bramble. Yet I cannot help thinking, I have some right to discharge the overslowings of my spleen upon you, whose province it is to remove those disorders that occasion it; and let me tell you, it is no small alleviation of my grievances, that I have a sensible friend, to whom I can communicate my crusty humours, which, by retention, would grow intolerably acrimonious.

You must know, I find nothing but disappointment at Bath; which is fo altered, that I can scarce believe it is the same place that I frequented about thirty years ago. Methin's I hear you fay, " Al-" tered it is, without all doubt; but then it is alat tered for the better; a truth which, perhaps, you would own without belitation, if you yourfelf was not altered for the worle." The reflection may, for aught I know, be just. The inconveniencies which i overlooked in the high day of health, will naturally firike with exaggerated impr. fion on the irritable nerves of an invalid, furpriled by premature old age, and fluttered with long fuffering But, I believe, you will not deny, that this place, which Nature and Providence feem to have intended as a resource from distemper and disquiet. is become the very centre of racket and diffipation. Inficad

Instead of that peace, tranquillity and ease, so necesfary to those who labour under bad health, weak nerves, and irregular spirits; here we have nothing but noise tumult and hurry; with the fatigue and flavery of maintaining a ceremonial, more stiff, formal, and oppressive, than the etiquette of a German elector. A national hospital it may be; but one would imagine, that none but lunatics are admitted; and, truly, I will give you leave to tell me fo, if I ftay much longer at Bath .- But I shall take another opportunity to explain my fentiments at greater length on this subject ___ I was impatient to fee the boasted improvements in architecture, for which the upper parts of the town have been fo much celebrated, and t'other day I made a circuit of all the new buildings. The fquare, though irregular, is, on the whole, pretty well laid out, spacious, open, and airy; and, in my opinion, by far the most wholesome and agreeable situation in Bath, especially the upper fide of it; but the avenues to it are mean, dirty, dangerous, and indirect. Its communication with the Baths, is through the yard of an inn, where the poor trembling valetudinarian is carried in a chair, betwixt the heels of a double row of horses, wincing under the curry-combs of grooms and postillions, over and above the hazard of being obftructed, or overturned by the carriages which are continually making their exit or their entrance. I suppose after some chairmen shall have been mained, and a few lives loft by those accidents, the corporation will think, in earnest, about providing a more fafe and commodious passage. The Circus is a pretty bauble; contrived for shew, and looks like Vefpafian's amphitheatre turned outfide in. If we confider it in point of magnificence, the great number of fmall doors belonging to the separate houses, the inconsiderable height of the different orders, the affected ornaments of the architrave, architrave, which are both childish and misplaced, at d the areas projecting into the street, surrounded with iron rails, deftroy a good part of its effect upon the eye; and, perhaps, we shall find it still more defective, if we view it in the light of convenience. The figure of each seperate dwelling-house, being the fegment of a circle, must spoil the symmetry of the rooms, by contracting them towards the street-windows, and leaving a larger fweep in the space behind. If, inflead of the areas and iron rails, which feem to be of very little use, there had been a corridore with arcades all round, as in Covent-garden, the appearance of the whole would have been more magnificent and firiking; those arcades would have afforded an agreeable covered walk, and sheltered the poor chairmen and their carriages from the rain, which is here almost perpetual. At present, the chairs stand foaking in the open street, from morning to night, till they become fo many boxes of wet leather, for the benefit of the gouty and reumatic, who are transported in them from place to place. Indeed this is a shocking inconvenience that exends over the whole city; and, I am perfuded, it produces infinite mischief to the delicate and infirm; even the close chairs, contrived for the fick, by standing in the open air, have their freeze linings impregnated, like fo many fpunges, with the moisture of the atmosphere, and those cases of cold vapour must give a charming check to the prespiration of a patient, piping hot from the Bath, with all his pores wide open.

But, to return to the Circus; it is inconvenient from its fituation, at so great a distance from all the markets, baths, and places of public entertainment. The only entrance to it, through Gay-street, is so dissicult, steep, and slippy, that, in wet weather, it must be exceeding dangerous, both for those that ride in carriages, and those that walk a-foot; and when the street is covered with snow, as it was for fifteen days successively this very winter, I don't fee how any individual could go either up or down, without the most eminent hazard of broken bones. In blowing weather, I am told, most of the houses in this bill are smothered with smoke, forced down the chimneys, by the guits of wind reverberated from the hill behind, which (I apprehend likewise) must render the atmosphere here more humid and unwholesome than it is in the fquare below; for the clouds, formed by the confant evaporation from the baths and rivers in the bottom, will, in their afcent this way, be first attracted and detained by the hill that rifes close behind the Circus, and load the air with a perpetual fuccession of vapours: this point, however, may be easily ascertained by means of an hygrometer, or a paper of falt of tartar exposed to the action of the atmosphere. The same artist, who planned the Circus, has likewise projected a Crescent; when that is finished, we shall probably have a Star; and those who are living thirty years hence, may, perhaps, fee all the figns of the Zodiac exhibited in architecture at Bath. Thefe, however, fantastical, are ftill defigns that denote fome ingenuity and knowledge in the architect; but the rage of building has laid hold on fuch a number of adventurers that one fees new houses starting up in every out-let and every corner of Bath; contrived without judgment, executed without folidity, and fluck together with fo little regard to plan or propriety, that the different lines of the new rows and buildings interfere with, and interfect one another in every different angle of conjunction. They look like the wreck of fireets and fquares disjointed by an earthquake, which hath broken the ground into a variety of holes and hillocks; or, as if some Gothic devil had stuffed them altogether in a bag, and left them to stand higgledy, piggledy, just as as chance directed. What fort of a monster Bath will become in a few years, with those growing excrescences, may be easily conceived: but the want of beauty and proportion is not the worst effect of these new mansions; they are built fo flight, with the fost crumbling stone found in this neighbourhood, that I should never sleep guietly in one of them, when it blowed (as the failors fay) a cap-full of wind; and I am perfuaded, that my hind, Roger Willams, or any man of equal strength, would be able to push his foot through the strongest part of the walls without any great exertion of mufcles. All thefe abfurdities arise from the general tide of luxury, which hath overspread the nation, and swept away all, even the very dregs of the people. Every upftart of fortune, harneffed in the trappings of the mode, prefents himfelf at Bath, as in the very focus of observation-Clerks and factors from the East Indies, loaded with the spoil of plundered provinces; planters, negro-drivers, and hucksters, from our American plantations, enriched they know not how; agents, commissaries, and contractors, who have fattened, in two fuccessive wars, on the blood of the nation; usurers, brokers, and jobbers of every kind; men of low birth, and no breeding, have found themselves suddenly translated into a state of affluence, unknown to former ages; and no wonder that their brains should be intoxicated with pride, vanity and prefumption. Knowing no other criterion of greatness, but the oftentation of wealth, they discharge their affluence without taste or conduct, through every channel of the most absurd extravagance; and all of them hurry to Bath, because here, without any further qualifications, they can mingle with the princes and nobles of the land. Even the wives and daughters of low tradefmen. who, like shovel-nosed thanks, prey upon the blubber ber of those uncouth whales of fortune, are infected with the fame rage of displaying their importance; and the flightest indisposition serves them for a pretext to infift upon being conveyed to Bath, where they may hobble country dances and cotillions among lordlings, 'fquires, counfellors, and clergy. delicate creatures from Bedfordbury, Butcher-row, Crutched-Friers, and Botolph lane, cannot breathe in the gross air of the Lower Town, or conform to the vulgar rules of a common lodging-house; the husband. therefore, must provide an entire house, or elegant apartments in the new buildings. Such is the compolition of what is called the fashionable company at Bath; where a very inconfiderable proportion of genteel people are loft in a mob of impudent plebians, who have neither understanding nor judgment, nor the least idea of propriety and decorum; and seem to enjoy nothing fo much as an opportunity of infulting their betters.

Thus the number of people, and the number of houses, continue to increase; and this will ever be the case, till the streams that swell this irresistible torrent of folly and extravagance, shall either be exhausted, or turned into other channels, by incidents and events which I do not pretend to foresee. This, I own, is a subject on which I cannot write with any degree of patience; for the mob is a monster I never could abide, either in its head, tail, midriss, or members; I detest the whole of it, as a mass of ignorance, presumption, malice, and brutality, and, in this term of reprobation, I include, without respect of rank, station, or quality, all those of both sexes, who affect its manners, and court its society.

But I have written till my fingers are crampt, and my nausea begins to return—By your advice; I sent to London a few days ago for half a pound of Gengzeng; though I doubt much, whether that which which comes from America is equally efficacious with what is brought from the East Indies. Some years ago, a friend of mine paid fixteen guineas for two ounces of it; and, in fix months after, it was fold in the same shop for five shillings the pound. In short, we live in a vile world of fraud and sophistication; so that I know nothing of equal value with the genuine friendship of a sensible man; a rare jewel! which I cannot help thinking myself in possession of, while I repeat the old declaration, that I am, as usual, Dear Lewis,

Your affectionate

M. BRAMBLE.

After having been agitated in a short hurricane, on my first arrival, I have taken a small house in Milfham street, where I am tolerably well lodged, for five guineas a week. I was yesterday at the Pump-room, and drank about a pint of the water, which feems to agree with my stomach; and tomorrow morning I shall bathe, for the first time; To that in a few posts you may expect farther trouble; mean while, I am glad to find that the inoculation has fucceeded fo well with poor Joyce, and that her face will be but little marked-If my friend Sir Thomas was a fingle man, I would not trust such a handsome wench in his family; but as I have recommended her, in a particular manner, to the protection of Lady G____, who is one of the best women in the world, she may go thither without hefitation, as foon as she is quite recovered, and fit for fervice-Let her mother have money to provide her with necessaries, and fhe may ride behind her brother on Bucks; but you must lay strong injunctions on Jack, to take particular care of the trufty old veteran, who has faithfully earned his present ease, by his past services.

THE pleasure I received from yours, which came to hand yesterday, is not to be expressed. Love and friendship are, without doubt, charming passions; which absence serves only to heighten and improve. Your kind present of the garnet bracelets, I shall keep as carefully as I preserve my own life; and I beg you will accept, in return, of my heart-housewife, with the tortoife-fhell memorandum-book, as a trifling pledge of my unalterable affection.

Bath is to me a new world——All is gaiety, good humour and diversion. The eye is continually entertained with the splendor of dress and equipage; and the ear with the found of coaches, chaifes, chairs, and other carriages. The merry bells ring round, from morn till night. Then we are welcomed by the city-waits in our own lodgings: we have music in the Pump-room every morning, cotillions every foreneon in the rooms, balls twice 2week, and concerts every other night, besides private affemblies and parties without number - As foon as we were fettled in lodgings, we were vifited by the Mafter of the Ceremonies; a pretty little gentleman, fo sweet, fo fine, fo civil, and polite, that in our country he might pass for the prince of Wales; then he talks fo charmingly, both in verfe and profe, that you would be delighted to hear him discourse; for you must know he is a great writer, and has got five tragedies ready for the frage. He did us the favour to dine with us, by my uncie's invitation; and next day 'fquired my aunt and me to every part of Bath; which to be fure is an earthly paradife. The Square, the Circus, and Parade, put you in mind of the fumptuous palaces reprefented in prints and pictures; and the new buildings, fuch as Princes-Row, Harlequin's-Row, Bladud's-Row and twenty other rows, looks like fo many enchanted caftles, raised on hanging terraces.

At eight in the morning, we go in dishabille to the Pump-room; which is crowded like a Welsh fair; and there you fee the highest quality, and the lowest trades folks, juftling each other, without ceremony, hail-fellow well-met. The noise of the mutic playing in the gallery, the heat and flavour of fuch a crowd, and the hum and buz of their conversation, gave me the head-ach and vertigo the first day; but, afterwards, all these things became familiar, and even agreeable. - Right under the Pump-room windows is the King's Bath; a huge ciftern, where you fee the patients up to their necks in hot water. The ladies wear jackets and petticoats of brown linen, with chip hats, in which they fix their handkerchiefs to wipe the fweat from their faces; but, truly, whe. ther it is owing to the fleam that furrounds them, or the heat of the water, or the nature of the drefs, or to all these causes together, they look so flushed, and fo frightful, that I always turn my eyes another way ____ My aunt, who favs every person of fashion should make her appearance in the bath, as well as in the abby church, contrived a cap with cherry-coloured ribband to fuit her complexion, and obliged Win to attend her yesterday morning in the water. But, really, her eyes were fo red, that they made mine water as I viewed her from the Pumproom; and as for poor Win, who wore a bat trimmed with blue, what betwixt her wan complexion and her fear, the looked like the ghost of some pale maiden, who had drowned herfelf for love. When Pa the came out of bath, the took affafætida drops, the and and was fluttered all day; fo that we could hardly keep her from going into hysterics: but her mistress says it will do her good; and poor Win curties, with the tears in her eyes. For my part, I content myself with drinking about half a pint of the water every morning.

The pumper, with his wife and fervant, attend within a bar; and the glaffes, of different fizes, fland ranged in order before them, fo you have nothing to do, but to point at that which you choose, and it is filled immediately, hot and fparkling from the pump. It is the only hot water I could drink, without being fick-Far from having that effect, it is rather agreeable to the tafte, grateful to the stomach, and reviving to the spirits. You cannot imagine what wonderful cures it performes ____ My uncle began with it the other day; but he made wry faces in drinking, and I am afraid he will leave it off The first day we came to Bath, he fell into a violent paffion; beat two black-a-moors, and I was afraid he would have fought with their mafter, but the stranger proved a peaceable man. To be fure the gout had got into his head, as my aunt observed: but, I believe, his passion drove it away; for he has been remarkably well ever fince. It is a thousand pities he should ever be troubled with that ugly distemper; for when he is free from pain, he is the best tempered man upon earth; so gentle, so generous, fo charitable, that every body loves him; and fo good to me, in particular, that I shall never be able to shew the deep sense I have of his tenderness and affection.

Hard by the Pump-room, is a coffee-house for the ladies; but my aunt says, young girls are not admitted, inasmuch as the conversation turns upon politics, scandal, philosophy, and other subjects above our capacity; but we are allowed to accompany them to the booksellers shops, which are charming places of Vol. I.

refort; where we read novels, plays, pamphlets, and news-papers, for fo small a subscription as a crown aquarter; and in these offices of intelligence, (as my brother calls them) all the reports of the day, and all the private transactions of the Bath, are first entered and discussed. From the bookfeller's shop we make a tour through the milliners and toy-men; and commonly stop at Mr Gill's, the pastry-cook, to take a jelly, a tart, or a small bason of vermicelli. There is, moreover, another place of entertainment on the other fide of the water, opposite to the Grove; to which the company croffes over in a boat ____ It is called Spring Garden; a fweet retreat, laid out in walks and ponds, and parterres of flowers; and there is a long-room for breakfasting and dancing. As the fituation is low and damp, and the feafon has been remarkably wet, my uncle won't fuffer me to go thither, left I should catch cold: but my aunt fays it is all a vulgar prejudice; and, to be fure, a great many gentlemen and ladies of Ireland frequent the place, without feeming to be the worfe for it. They fay, dancing at Spring Gardens, when the air is moift, is recommended to them as an excellent cure for the rheumatism. I have been twice at the play; where notwithstanding the excellence of the performers, the gaiety, of the company, and the decorations of the theatre, which are very fine, I could not help reflecting, with a figh, upon our poor homely representations at Gloucester-But this, in confidence to my dear Willis-You know my heart, and excuse its weakness .-

After all, the great scenes of entertainment at Bath, are the two public rooms; where the company meet alternately every evening——They are spacious, losty, and when lighted up, appear very striking. They are generally crowded with well dressed people, who drink tea in separate parties, play play at cards, walk, or fit and chat together, just as they are disposed. Twice a week there is a ball; the expence of which is defrayed by a voluntary fubscription among the gentlemen; and every subscriber has three tickets. I was there Friday last with my aunt, under the care of my brother, who is a fubscriber; and Sir Ulic Muckilligut recommended his nephew, Captain O Donaghan, to me as a partner; but Jery excused himself, by faying, I had got the head-ach; and, indeed, it was really fo, though I can't imagine how he knew it. The place was fo hot, and the smell fo different from what we are used to in the country, that I was quite feverish when we came away. Aunt fays it is the effect of a vulgar constitution, reared among woods and mountains; and, that as I become accustomed to genteel company, it will wear off ____Sir Ulic was very complaifant; made her a great many highflown compliments; and when we retired, handed her with great ceremony to her chair. The captain I believe, would have done me the fame favour; but my brother feeing him advance, took me under his arm, and wished him a good night. The captain is a pretty man, to be fure; tall and straight, and well made; with light-grey eyes, and a Roman nofe; but there is a certain boldness in his look and manner, that puts one out of countenance - But I am afraid I have put you out of all patience with this long unconnected fcrawl; which I shall therefore conclude, with affuring you, that neither Bath, nor London, or all the diversions of life, shall ever be able to estace the idea of my dear Letty, from the heart of your ever affectionte

To Mrs MARY JONES, at Brambleton-hall.

DEAR MOLLY JONES, HEAVING got a frank, I now return your 1 fever, which I received by Mr Higgins at the Hot-Well, together with the stockings, which his wife footed for me; but now they are of no fervice. No body wears fuch a thing in this place-O Molly! you that live in the country have no deception of our doings at Bath. Here is fuch dreffing, and fiddling, and dancing, and gadding, and courting, and plotting, -- O gracious! if God had not given me a good stock of discretion, what a power of things might not I reveal, concarning old mifirefs and young miffress; Jews with beards, that were no Jews; but handfome Christains, without a hair upon their fin, strolling with spectacles, to get speech of Miss Liddy. But she's a dear sweet foul, as innocent as the child unborn. She has tould me all her inward thoughts, and disclosed her pasfion for Mr Wilfon; and that's not his name neither; and thof he acted among the player-men, he is meat for their mafters; and fhe has gi'en me her yallow trollopea; which Mrs Drab, the manty-maker, fays will look very well when it is fcowred and smoaked with filfur-You knows as how, yallow fitts my fizzogmony. God, he knows what havock I shall make among the mail fex, when I make my first appearance in this killing collar, with a full fut of gaze, as good as new, that I bought last Friday of Madam Friponeau, the French mullaner -Dear girl, I have feen all the fine thews of Bath ; the Prades, the Squires, and the Circlis, the Crashit, the Hottogon, and Bloody Buildings, and Harry

King's row; and I have been twice in the Bath

with mistress, and na'r a smoak upon our backs husfy The first time I was mortally afraid, and flu ftered all day; and afterwards made believe that I had got the heddick: but mistress said, if I didn't go, I should take a dose of bum-taffy; and so remembring how it worked Mrs Gwyllim, a pennorth, I chose rather to go again with her into the Bath, and then I met with an axident. I dropt my petticoat and could not get it up from the bottom-But what did that fignify? they mought laff, but they could fee nothing; for I was up to the fin in water. To be fure, it threw me into fuch a gumbustion, that I know not what I faid, nor what I did, nor how they got me out, and rapt me in a blanket ____Mrs Tabitha fcoulded a little when we got home; but she knows, as I know, what's what ____ Ah Laud help you !-There is Sir Yury Micligut, of Balnaclinch, in the county of Kalloway - I took down the name from his gentleman, Mr O Frizzle, and he has got an estate of fifteen hundred a-year I am fure he is both rich and generous—But you nofe, Molly, I was always famous for keeping fecrets; and to he was very fafe in trufting me with his flegm for mistress; which, to be fure, is very honourable : for Mr O Erizzle affures me, he values not her portion, a brafs varthing-And, indeed, what's poor ten thousand pounds to a Baron Knight of his fortune? and, truly, I told Mr O Frizzle, that was all she had to trust to-As for John Thomas, he's a morass fellor-I vow, I thought he would a fit with Mr O Frizzle, because he axed me to dance with him a Spring Garden_ But God he knows I have no thoughts eyther wan or t'other.

I AM aftonished, that Dr Lewis should take upon him to give away Alderney, without my privity and concurrants. What fignifies my brother's order? My brother is little better than Noncompush. He would give away the shirt off his back, and the teeth out of his head; nay, as for that matter, he would have ruinated the family with his ridiculous charities, if it had not been for my four quarters—What between his wilfulness and his waste, his trumps, and his frenzy, I lead the life of an indented flave. Alderney gave four gallons a-day ever fince the calf was fent to market. There is fo much milk out of my dairy, and the press must stand still; but I wont loose a cheese-pairing; and the milk shall be made good, if the farvants should go without butter. If they must needs have butter, let them make it of sheep milk; but then my wool will fuffer for want of grace; fo that I must be a loser on all fides ----- Well, patience is like a stout Welsh poney; it bears a great deal, and trots a great way; but it will tire at the long-run. Before its long, perhaps I may shew Matt, that I was not born to be the houshold drudge to my dying day-Gwyn rites from Crickhowel, that the price of flannel is fallen three-farthings an ell; and that's another good penny out of my pocket -- When I go to market to fell, my commodity stinks; but when I want to buy the commonest thing, the owner pricks it up under my note; and it can't be had for love nor money-I think every thing runs crofs at Brambletonhall—You fay the gander has broke the eggs, which is a phinumenon I don't understand; for when the fox carried off the old goofe last year, he took her place, and hatched the eggs, and partected ed the groflings like a tender parent. Then you tell me the thunder has foured two barrels of bear in the feller. But how the thunder should get there, when the feller was double-locked, I can't comprehend. Howsomever I won't have the bear thrown out, till I fee it with my own eyes. Perhaps, it will recover. -At least it will ferve for vineagar to the fervants. You may leave off the fires in my brother's chamber and mine, as it is unfartain when we return.- I hope, Gwyllim, you'll take care there is no waste; and have an eye to the maids, and keep them to their fpinning. I think they may go very well without bear in hot weather .- It ferves only to inflame the blood, and fet them a gog after the men. Water will make them fair, and keep them cool and temperit. Don't forget to put in the portmantle, that cums with Williams, along with my riding-habit, hat and feather, the viol of purl-water, and the tincktur for my stomach; being as how I am much troubled with flutterencies. This it all at present, from

To Dr LEWIS.

DEAR DICK,

T HAVE done with the waters; therefore your advice comes a day too late ___ I grant that physic is no mystery of your making. I know it is a mystery in its own nature; and, like other mysteries, requires a strong gulph of faith to make it go down-Two days ago, I went into the King's Bath, by the advice of our friend Ch____, in order to clear the strainer of the ikim, for the benefit of a free perspiration; and the first object that saluted my eyes was a child full of scrophulous ulcers, carried in the arms of one of the guides, under the very nofes of the bathers, I was fo shocked at the fight, that I retired immediately with indignation and difgust ----- Suppose the matter of those ulcers, floating on the water, comes in contract with my ikin, when the pores are all open, I would ask you what must be the consequence? Good Heaven, the very thought makes my blood run cold! we know not what fores may be running into the water while we are bathing, and what fort of matter we may thus imbibe; the king's-evil, the feurvy, the cancer, and pox; and, no doubt, the heat will render the virus the more volatile and penetrating. To purify myself from all such contamination, I went to the Duke of Kingston's private Bath, and there I was almost suffocated for want of free air, the place was fo finall, and the steam fo stifling.

After all, if the intention is no more than to wash the skin, I am convinced that simple element is more effectual than any water impregnated with salt and iron; which, being astringent, will certainly contract the pores, and leaves a kind of crust upon the surface of the body. But I am now as much afraid of drinking, as of bathing; for, after a long conversation with the Doctor, about the construction of the pump and the cistern, it is very far from being clear with me, that the patients in the Pumproom don't swallow the scourings of the bathers. I can't help fuspecting, that there is, or may be, some regurgitation from the bath into the ciftern of the pump. In that case, what a delicate beveridge is every day quaffed by the drinkers; medicated with the fweat, and dirt, and dandriff; and the abominable discharges of various kinds, from twenty different difeated bodies, parboiling in the kettle below. In order to avoid this filthy composition, I had recourse to the spring that supplies the private baths on the Abbey-green; but I at once perceived fomething extraordinary in the tafte and fmell; and, upon enquiry, I find that the Roman baths in this quarter, were found covered by an old burying ground, belonging to the Abbey; through which, in all probability, the water drains in its passage: fo that as we drink the decoction of living bodies at the Pump-room, we swallow the strainings of rotten bones and carcafes at the private bath ___ I vow to God, the very idea turns my stomach! - determined, as I am, against any further use of the Bathwaters, this confideration would give me little difturbance, if I could find any thing more pure, or less pernicious, to queuch my thirst; but although the natural fprings of excellent water, are feen gushing spontaneous on every side, from the hills that furrounds us, the inhabitants in general make use of we'l-water, fo impregnated with nitre, or alum, or fome other villainous mineral, that it is equally ungrateful to the tafte, and mischievous to the constitution: It must be owned, indeed, that here, in Milsham-street, we have a precarious and scanty supply from the hill; which is collected in an open baton

in the Circus, liable to be defiled with dead dogs, cats, rats, and every species of nastiness, which the rascally populace may throw into it, from mere wantonness and brutality.

Well, there is no nation that drinks so hoggishly as the English——What passes for wine among us, is not the juice of the grape. It is an adulterous mixture, brewed up of nauseous ingredients, by dunces, who are bunglers in the art of poison-making; and yet we, and our forefathers, are and have been poisoned by this cursed drench, without taste or slavour—The only genuine and wholesome beveridge in England, is London porter, and Dorchester table-beer; but as for your ale and your gin, your cyder and your perry, and all the trashy family of made wines, I detest them as infernal compositions, contrived for the destruction of the human species.——But what have I to do with the human species, except a very sew friends, I care not if the whole was——.

Hark ye, Lewis, my misanthropy increases every day-The longer I live, I find the folly and the fraud of mankind grow more and more intolerable -I wish I had not come from Brambleton-hall; after having lived in folitude fo long, I cannot bear the hurry and impertinence of the multitude; befides, every thing is sophisticated in these crowded places. Snares are laid for our lives in every thing we eat and drink: the very air we breathe, is loaded with contagion. We cannot even fleep, without risque of infection. I say, infection -This place is the rendezvous of the diseased - You won't deny, that many difeases are infectious; even the confumption itself, is highly infectious. When a perfon dies of it in Italy, the bed and bedding are destroyed; the other furniture is exposed to the weather, and the apartment white washed, before it is occupied by any other living foul. You'll allow, that nothing receives infection fooner, or retains it longer, than blankets, feather-beds, and matraffes-'Sdeath! how do I know what miferable objects have been stewing in the bed where I now lie !- I wonder, Dick, you did not put me in mind of fending for my own matraffes .- But, if I had not been an afs, I should not have needed a remembrancer-There is always fome plaguy reflection that rifes up in judgment against me, and ruffles my spirits-Therefore, let us change the subject-

I have other reasons for abridging my stay at Bath -You know fifter Tabby's complexion-If Mrs Tabitha Bramble had been of any other race, I should certainly have looked upon her as the most -But, the truth is, she has found means to interest my affection; or rather, she is beholden to the force of prejudice commonly called the ties of Well, this amiable maiden has actually commenced a flirting correspondence with an Irish baronet of fixth-five. His name is Sir Ulic Mackilligut. He is faid to be much out at elbows; and, I believe, has received false intelligence with respect to her fortune. Be that as it may, the connection is exceedingly ridiculous, and begins already to excite whispers. For my part, I have no intention to dispute her free agency; though I shall fall upon some expedient to undeceive her paramour, as to the point which he has principally in view. But I don't think her conduct is a proper example for Liddy, who has also attracted the notice of some coxcombs in the rooms; and Jery tells me, he fuspects a strapping fellow, the Knight's nephew, of fome defign upon the girl's heart. I shall, therefore, keep a strict eye over her aunt and her, and even shift the scene, if I find the matter grow more ferious-You perceive what an agreeable tafk

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR KNIGHT,

THINK those people are unreasonable, who complain that Bath is a contracted circle, in which the fame dull fcenes perpetually revolve, without variation-I am, on the contrary, amazed to find fo small a place, fo crowded with entertainment and variety London itself can hardly exhibit one species of diverfion, to which we have not fomething analogous at Bath, over and above those singular advantages that are peculiar to the place. Here, for example, a man has daily opportunities of feeing the most remarkable characters of the community. He fees them in their natural attitudes and true colours; descended from their pedestals, and divested of their formal draperies. undifguited by art and affectation—Here we have minifters, of ftate, judges, generals, bishops, projectors. philosophers, wits, poets, players, chemists, fiddlers, and buffoons. If he makes any confiderable flay in the place, he is fure of meeting with fome particular friend, whom he did not expect to fee; and to me there is nothing more agreeable, than fuch cafual rencounters. Another entertainment peculiar to Bath, arifes from the general mixture of all degrees aff mblee in our public rooms, with ut diffinction of and or fortune. This is what my uncle repro-Vol. I. bates bates, as a monfirous jumble of heterogeneous principles; a vile mob of noise and impertinence, without decency or subordination. But this chaos is to me a source of infinite amusement.

I was extremely diverted, last ball night, to fee the Mafter of the Ceremonies leading, with great folemnity, to the upper end of the room, an antiquated Abigail, dreffed in her lady's cast clothes; whom he (I suppose) mistook for some countess just arrived at the Bath. The ball was opened by a Scotch lord, with a mulatto heirefs from St Chriftopher's; and the gay colonel Tinfel danced all the evening with the daughter of an eminent tinman from the borough of Southwark .- Yesterday merning, at the Pump-room, I faw a brokenwinded Wapping landlady fqueeze through a circle of peers, to falute her brandy-merchant, who flood by the window, prop'd upon crutches; and a paralytic attorney of Shoe-lane, in shuffling up to the bar, kicked the fkins of the chancellor of England, while his lordship, in a cut bob, drank a glass of water at the pump. I cannot account for my being pleased with these incidents, any other way than by faving they are truly ridiculous in their own nature, and ferve to heighten the humour in the farce of life, which I am determined to enjoy as long as I can.

These follies, that move my uncle's spleen, excite my laughter. He is as tender as a man without a skin; who cannot bear the slightest touch without slinching. What tickies another would give him torment; and yet he has what we may call lucid intervals, when he is remarkably facetious—indeed, I never knew a hypochendriac to apt to be infected with good-homour. He is the most risble mianthrope I ever met with. A lucky joke, or any in dicrous incident, will set him a laughing immoderately, even in in one of his most gloomy paroxysm and, when the laugh is over, he will curse his own imbecillity. In conversing with strangers, he betrays no marks of disquiet-He is splenetic with his familiars only; and not even with them, while they keep his attention employed; but when his spirits are not exerted externally, they feem to recoil and prey upon himfelf-He has renounced the waters with execration; but he begins to find a more efficacious, and, certainly, a much more palatable remedy in the pleasures of society. He has discovered some old friends, among the invalids of Bath; and, in particular, renewed his acquaintance with the celebrated James Quin, who certainly did not come here to drink water. You cannot doubt but that I had the strongest curiosity to know this original; and it was gratified by Mr Bramble, who has had him twice at our house to dinner.

So far as I am able to judge, Quin's character is rather more respectable than it has been generally represented. His bon mots are in every witling's mouth; but many of them have a rank flavour, which one would be apt to think was derived from a natural groffness of idea. I suspect, however, that justice has not been done the author, by the collectors of those Quiniana; who have let the best of them flip through their fingers, and only retained fuch as were fuited to the tafte and organs of the multitude. How for he may relax in his hours of jollity, I cannot pretend to fay; but his general conversation is conducted by the nicest rules of propriety; and Mr James Quin is, certainly, one of the best bred men in the kingdom. He is not only a most agreeable companion; but (as I am credibly informed) a very honest man; highly sufceptible of friendship, warm, steady, and even generous in his attachments; disdaining flattery, and incapable of meanness and distimulation. Were I to judge, however, from Quin's eyes alone, I G 2 should take him to be proud, infolent, and cruel-There is fomething remarkably fevere and forbidding in his afpect; and, I have been told, he was ever disposed to infult his inferiors and dependents. Perhaps that report has influenced my opinion of his looks --- You know we are the fools of prejudice. Howfoever that may be, I have as yet feen nothing but his favourable fide: and my uncle, who frequently confers with him in a corner, declares he is one of the most fensible men he ever knew----- He feems to have a reciprocal regard for old Square-toes, whom he calls by the familiar name of Marthew, and often reminds of their old tavernadventures; on the other hand, Matthew's eyes fparkle whenever Quin makes his appearance Let him be never to jarring and discordant, Quin puts him in tune; and, like treble and bass in the same concert, they make excellent music together-Tother day, the conversation turning upon Shakespeare, I could not help faying, with fome emotion, that I would give an hundred guineas to fee Mr Quin act the part of Falstaff; upon which, turning to me with a fmile, " And I would give a thousand, young " gentleman, (faid he) that I could gratify your longsing."-My uncle and he are perfectly agreed in their estimate of life; which, Quin fays, would flink in his nostrils, if he did not steep it in claret.

I want to see this phenomenon in his cups; and have almost prevailed upon uncle to give him a small turtle at the Bear. In the mean time, I must entertain you with an incident, that seems to confirm the judgment of those two cynic philosophers. I took the liberty to differ in opinion from Mr Bramble, when he observed, that the mixture of people in the entertainments of this place, was destructive of all order and urbanity; that it rendered the plebeians insufferably arrogant and troublesome, and

and vulgarized the deportment and sentiments of those who moved in the upper spheres of life. He said, such a preposterous coalition would bring us into contempt with all our neighbours; and was worse, in sast, than debasing the gold coin of the nation. I argued, on the contrary, that those plebeians who discovered such eagerness to imitate the dress and equipage of their superiors, would likewise, in time, adopt their maxims and their manners, be polished by their conversation, and refined by their example; but when I appealed to Mr Q in, and asked if he did not think that such an unreserved mixture would improve the whole mass?—"Yes, (said he) as "a plate of marmalade would improve a pan of sirre-"verence."

I owned I was not much conversant in high-life, but I had feen what were called polite affemblies in London and elfewhere; that those of Bath feemed to be as decent as any; and that, upon the whole, the individuals that composed it, would not be found deficient in good manners and decorum. " But "let us have recourfe to experience, (faid I) --" lack Holder, who was intended for a person, "has fricceeded to an estate of two thousand a year, to by the death of his elder brother. He is now at "the Bith, driving about in a phæton and four, with French horns. He has treated with turtle " and claret at all the taverns in Bath and Briftol, "till his guests are gorged with good cheer: he whas bought a dozen fuits of fine clothes, by the, dadvice of the Matter of the Ceremonies, under whose tuition he has entered himself; he has "loft fome hundreds at billiards to tharpers, and "taken one of the nymphs of Avon-ftreet into "keeping but, finding all these channels infuffi-" cient to drain him of his current cash, his coun-"fellor has engaged him to give a general tea-"drinking to-morrow at Wiltihire's room In G 2 " order

"order to give it the more eclat, every table is to be furnished with sweet-meats and nosegays; which, however, are not to be touched till notice is given by the ringing of a bell, and then the ladies may help themselves without restriction. This will be no bad way of trying the company's breed" ing____"

"I will abide by that experiment, (cried my " uncle) and if I could find a place to fland fecure, " without the vortex of the tumult, which I know " will enfue, I would certainly go thither and en-"joy the scene," Quin proposed that we should take our station in the music-gallery; and we took his advice Holder had got thither before us, with his horns perdue; but we were admitted. The tea drinking paffed as usual; and the company having risen form the tables, were fauntering in groupes in expectation of the fignal for attack, when the bell beginning to ring, they flew with eagerness to the defert, and the whole place was inftantly in commotion. There was nothing but justling, scrambling, pulling, fnatching, ftruggling, fcolding, and fcreaming. The nofegays were torn from one another's hands and bosoms; the glaffes and china went to wreck; the tables and floor were frewed with comfits. Some cried; fome fwore; and the tropes and figures of Eillingsgate were used without referve in all their native zeft and flavour: nor were those flowers of rhetoric unattended with figuificant gesticulation. Some snapped their fingers; some forked them out; some clapped their hands, and fome their back-fides; at length, they fairly proceeded to pulling caps, and every thing feemed to prefage a general battle; when Holder ordered his horns to found a charge with a view to animate the combatants, and inflame the contest; but his manœuvre produced an effect quite contrary to what he expected. It was a note of reproach proach that roused them to an immediate sense of their disgraceful situation. They were ashamed of their absurd deportment, and suddenly desisted. They gathered up their caps, russles, and handkerchiess; and great part of them retired in silent mortification:

Quin laughed at this adventure; but my uncle's delicacy was hurt. He hung his head in manifest chagrin, and feemed to repine at the triumph of his judgment-Indeed, the victory was more complete than he imagined; for as we afterwards learned, the two amazons who fingularized themselves most in the action, did not come from the purlieus of Puddledock, but from the courtly neighbourhood of St James's palace. One was a baronefs, and the other a wealthy knight's dowager ___ My uncle spoke not a word, till we made our retreat good to the coffeehouse: where, taking off his hat and wiping his fore. head, " I blefs God (faid he) that Mrs Tabitha Bram-" ble did not take the field to-day!" " I would pit " her for a cool hundred (cried Quin) against the best " fhake-bag of the whole main." The truth is, nothing could have kept her at home but the accident of her having taken physic before she knew the nature of the entertainment. She has been for some days furbishing up an old fuit of black velvet, ito make her appearance as Sir Ulic's partner at the next ball.

I have much to fay of this amiable kinfwoman; but she has not been properly introduced to your acquaintance. She is remarkably civil to Mr Quin; of whose farcastic humour she seems to stand in awe; but her caution is no match for her impertinence. "Mr Gwynn, (said she the other day) I was once vastly entertained with your playing the Ghost of Gimlet at Drury-lane, when you rose up through the stage, with a "white sace and red eyes, and spoke of quails "upon My uncle, frying with vexation, ried, " Good God, fifter, how you talk! I have a told you twenty times, that this gentleman's name " is not Gwynn .- " " Hoity toity, brother mine, " (she replied) no offence, I hope wynn, is an " honourable name, of true old British extraction " ____I thought the gentleman had been come of " Mrs Helen Gwynn, who was of his own profession; and if fo be that were the cafe, he might be of "King Charles's breed, and have royal blood in his " veins-" " No, Madam, (answered Quin, with " great folemnity) my mother was not a whore of "fuch diftinction-True it is, I am fometimes tempt-" ed to believe myself of royal descent; for my in-" clinations are often arbitrary --- If I was an absolute " prince, at this instant, I believe I should fend for the " head of your cook in a charger ___ She has com-" mitted felony on the person of that John Dory; "which is mangled in a cruel manner, and even pre-" lented without fauce-O tempora! This good-humoured fally turned the conversation into a less disagreeable channel—But, lest you should should think my scribble as tedious as Mrs Tabby's clack, I shall not add another word, but I am as usual,

J. MELFORD.

To Dr LEWIS.

DEAR LEWIS. RECEIVED your bill upon Wiltshire, which was punctually honoured; but, as I don't chuse to keep fo much cash by me, in a common lodging. house, I have deposited 250l. in the bank of Bath. and shall take their bills for it in London, when I leave this place, where the feafon draws to an end -You must know, that now being a-foot I am resolved to give Liddy a glimpse of London. She is one of the best hearted creatures I ever knew, and gains upon my affection every day ____ As for Tabby, I have dropt fuch hims to the Irish baronet, concerning her fortune, as, I make no doubt, will cool the ardour of his addresses. Then her pride will take the alarm; and the rancour of stale maidenhood being chafed, we shall hear nothing but flander and abuse of Sir Ulic Mackilligut --- This rupture. I foresee, will facilitate our departure from Bath; where, at prefent, Tabby feems to enjoy herfelf with peculiar fatisfaction. For my part, I deteft it fo much, that I should not have been able to stay so long in the place, if I had not discovered some old friends; whose conversation alleviates my disgust-Going to the coffee-house one forenoon, I could not help contemplating the company, with equal furprife and compaffion—We confifted of thirteen individuals; feven lamed by the gout, rheumatism, or palfy; three maimed by accident; and the rest either deaf or blind. One hobbled, another hopped, a third dragged his legs after him like a wounded snake, a sourch steaddled betwixt a pair of long crutches, like the munmy of a selon hanging in chains; a sifth was bent into a horizontal position, like a mounted telescope, shoved in by a couple of chairmen; and a sixth was the bust of a man, set upright in a wheelmachine, which the waiter moved from place to place.

Being struck with some of their faces, I consulted the subscription-book; and, perceiving the names of feveral old friends, began to confider the groupe with more attention. At length I discovered rear-admiral Biderick, the companion of my youth, whom I had not feen fince he was appointed lieutenant of He was metamorphofed into an the Severn. old man, with a wooden leg and a weatherbeaten face; which appeared the more ancient from his grey locks, that were truely venerable -Sitting down at the table, where he was reading a news-paper, I gazed at him for fome minutes, with a mixture of pleafure and regret, which made my heart gush with tenderness; then, taking him by the hand, "Ah, Sam, (faid I) forty years ago I · little thought _____ " I was too much moved to proceed. " An old friend, fure enough! (cried " he, squeezing my hand, and surveying me eagerly " through his glaffes) I know the looming of the vef-" fel, though the has been hard strained fince we " parted; but I can't heave up the name-The moment I told him who I was, he exclaimed, " Ha! Matt, my old fellow-cruifer, ftill aflow!" And, flarting up, hugged me in his arms. Is transport, however, boded me no good; for in laluting

faluting me, he thruit the spring of his spectacles in . to my eyes, and, at the fame time, fet his wooden flump upon my gouty toe; an attack that made me fhed tears in fad earnest ____ After the hurry of our recognition was over, he pointed out two of our common friends in the room; the buft was what remained of Colonel Cockril, who had loft the use of his limbs in making an American campaign; and the telescope proved to be my college chuin, Sir Reginald Bently; who with his new title, and unexpected inheritance, commenced fox hunter, without having served his apprenticeship to the mystery; and, in confequence of following the hounds through a river, was feized with an inflamation in his bowels, which has contracted him into his prefent attitude

Our former correspondence was forthwith renewed, with the most hearty expressions of mutual goodwill; and as we had met fo unexpectedly, we agreed to dine together that very day at the tavern. My friend Quin, being luckily unengaged, obliged us with his company; and, truly, this was the most happy day I have paffed these twenty years. You and I Lewis, having been always together, never tafted friendship in this high gout, contracted by long absence. I castnot express the half of what I felt at this casual meeting of three or four companions, who had been to long feparated, and to roughly treated by the froms of life. It was a renovation of youth; a kind of refuscion of the dead, that realized those interesting dreams, in which we fometimes retrieve our ancient friends from the grave. Perhaps, my enjoyment was not the less pleasing for being mixed with a strain of melancholy, produced by the remembrance of past scenes that conjured by the ideas of some endearing connections, which the hand of Death has actually diffolwed.

The spirits and good-humour of the company feemed to triumph over the wreck of their constitutions. They had even philosophy enough to joke upon their own calamities; fuch is the power of friendship. the fovereign cordial of life___ I afterwards found. however, that they were not without their moments, and even hours of disquiet. Each of them apart, in fucceeding conferences, expatiated upon his own particular grievances; and they were all malecontents at bottom-Over and above their personal disafters, they thought themselves unfortunate in the lotte of life. Balderick complained, that all the recompence he had for his long and hard fervice, w.s the half pay of a rear-admiral. The colonel was mornfied to fee himfelf over-topped by upftart generals, some of whom he had once commanded; and, being a man of a liberal turn, could ill put up with a modern annuity, for which he had fold his commission. As for the baronet, having run himfelf confiderably in debt, on a contested election, he has been obliged to relinquish his feat in parliament, and his feat in the country at the fame time, and his estate to rurse: but his chagrin, which is the effect of his own misconduct, does not effect me half to much as that of the other two. who have acted honourable and diftinguished parts on the great theatre, and are now reduced to lead a weary life in this flew pan of idleness and infignishcance. They have long left off using the waters, after having experienced their inefficacy. The diverfions of the place they are not in a condition to enjoy. How then do they make fhift to pass their time? In the forenoon they crawl cut to the rooms or the coffee-house, where they take a hand'at whift, or descant upon the General Adverifer; and their evenings hev murder in private parties, among pecvish invalids, and infiped old women

About a dozen years ago, many decent families. restricted to finall fortunes, besides those that came hither on the score of health, were tempted to fettle at Bath, where they could then live comfortably, and even make a genteel appearance, at a small expence: but the madness of the times has made the place too hot for them, and, they are now obliged to think of other migrations ___ Some have already fled to the mountains of Wales, and others have retired to Exeter. Thither, no doubt, they will be followed by the flood of luxury and extravagance, which will drive them from place to place to the very Land's End; and there, I suppose, they will be obliged to ship themselves to some other country. Bath is become a mere fink of profligacy and extortion. Every article of house keeping is raifed to an enormous price; a circumstance no longer to be wondered at, when we know that every petty retainer of fortune, piques himself upon keeping a table, and thinks 'tis for the honour of his character to wink at the knavery of his fervants. who are in a confederacy with the market-people: and, of confequence, pay whatever they demand. Here is now a mushroom of opulence, who pays a cook-feven guineas a-week for furnishing him with one meal a day. This portentous frenzy is become fo contagious, that the very rabble and refuse of mankind are infected. I have known a negrodriver from Jamaica, pay over-night to the mafter of one of the rooms fixty-five guineas for tea and coffee to the company, and leave Bath next morning, in fuch obscurity, that not one of his guests had the flightest idea of his person, or even made the least enquiry about his name. Incidents of this VOL. I.

kind are frequent; and every day teems with fresh abfurdities, which are too gross to make a thinking man merry.—But I feel the spleen creeping on me apace; and therefore will indulge you with a cessation, that you may have no unnecessary cause to curse your correspondence with,

To Miss LÆTITIA WILLIS, at Gloucester.

My DEAR LETTY,

WROTE you at great length by the post, the twenty-fixth of last month, to which I refer you for an account of our proceedings at Bath; and I expect your answer with impatience. But, having this opportunity of a private hand, I fend you two dozen of Bath rings; fix of the best of which I defire you will keep for yourfelf, and distribute the rest among the young ladies, our common friends, as you shall think proper_I don't know how you will approve of the mottos; some of them are not much to my own liking; but I was obliged to take fuch as I could find ready manufactured___I am vexed that neither you nor I have received any further information of a certain person-Sure it can't be wilful neglect!-O my dear Willis! I begin to be vifited by strange fancies, and to have some melancholy doubts; which, however, it would be ungenerous to harbour without further enquiry____My uncle who who has made me a present of a very fine set of garnets, talks of treating us with a joint to London; which, you may imagine, will be highly agreeable: but I like Bath so well, that I hope he won't think of leaving it till the season is quite over: and yet, betwixt friends, something has happened to my aunt which will pobably shorten our stay in this place.

Yesterday in the forenoon, she went by herself to a breakfasting in one of the rooms; and in half an hour, returned in great agitation, having Chowder along with her in the chair. I believe fome accident must have happened to that unlucky animal, which is the great fource of all her troubles. Dear Letty! what a pitty it is, that a woman of her years and difcretion, should place her affection upon such an ugly ill-conditioned cur, that fnarls and fnaps at every body. I asked John Thomas, the footman who attended her, what was the matter? and he did nothing but grin. A famous dog-doctor was fent for, and undertook to cure the patient, provided he might carry him home to his own house; but his mistress would not part with him out of her own fight ____She ordered the cook to warm clothes, which fhe applied to his bowels with her own hand. She gave up all thoughts of going to the ball in the evening; and when Sir Ulic came to drink tea, refused to be seen; so that he went away to look for another partner. My brother Jery whiftles and dances. My uncle fometimes thrugs up his thoulders, and fometimes burfts out a-laughing. My aunt fobs and fcolds by turns; and her woman, Win. Jenkins, stares and wonders with a foolish face of curiofity; and, for my part, I am as curious as she, but ashamed to ask queflions.

Perhaps time will discover the mystery; for if it was any thing that happened in the Rooms, it can't be long concealed—All I know is, that last night at supper, Miss Bramble spoke very disdainfully of Sir Usic Mackilligut, and asked her brother if he intended to keep us sweltering all the summer at Bath? "No sister Tabitha, (said he, with an arch smile) we shall retreat before the Dog-days begin; though I make no doubt, that with a little temperance and discretion, our constitutions might be keep cool emough all the year, even at Bath." As I don't know the meaning of this infinuation, I won't pretend to make any remarks upon it at present: hereafter, perhaps, I may be able to explain it more to your satisfaction——In the mean time I beg you will be punctual in your correspondence, and continue to love your ever faithful

LYDIA MELFORD.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxon.

So then Mrs Blackerby's affair has proved a Salfe alarm, and I have faved my money? I wish, however, her declaration had not been so premature, for though my being thought capable of making her a mother, might have given me some credit, the reputation of an intrigue with such a tracked pitcher does me no honour at all——In my last I told you I had hopes of seeing Quin, in his hours of elevation at the tavern, which is the temple of mirth and good sellowship; where he, as Priest of Comus, atters the inspirations of wit and humour——I have had that satisfaction. I have dined with his club at the Three Tune, and had the honour honour to fit him out. At half an hour past eight in the evening, he was carried home with fix good bottles of claret under his belt; and it being then Friday, he gave orders that he thould not be diflurbed till Sunday at noon-You must not imagine that this dose had any other effect upon his conversation, but that of making it more extravagantly entertaining He had loft the use of his limbs, indeed, several hours before we parted, but he retained all his other faculties in perfection; and as he gave vent to every whimfical idea as it rofe, I was really aftonished at the brilliancy of his thoughts, and the force of his expression. Quin is a real voluptuary in the articles of cating and drinking; and fo confirmed an epicure, in the common acceptation of the term, that he cannot put up with ordinary fare. This is a point of fuch importance with him, that he always takes upon himfelf the charge of catering; and a man admitted to his mess, is always fure of eating delicate victuals, and drinking excellent wine-He owns himfelf addicted to the delights of the stomach, and often jokes upon his own fenfuality; but there is nothing felfish in this apperite-He finds that good cheer unites good company; exhilerates the spirits, opens the heart, banishes all restraint from conversation, and promotes the happiest purposes of social life -But Mr James Quin is not a subject to be discussed in the compass of one letter; I shall therefore, at present, leave him to his repose, and call another of a very different complexion.

You defire to have further acquaintance with the person of our aunt, and promise yourself much entertainment from her connection with Sir Ulic Mackilligut; but in this hope you are baulked almady; that connexion is dissolved. The Irish baroner is an old hound, that, finding her carrion, has quitted the scent—I have already told you, that

Mrs Tabitha Bramble is a maiden of forty-five. In her person, she is tall, raw-boned, aukward, flat-chested, and stooping: her complexion is fallow and freckled; her eyes are not grey, but greenish like those of a cat, and generally inflamed; her hair is of a fandy, or rather a dufty hue; her forehead low; her nofe long, tharp, and towards the extremity, always red in cool weather; her lips fkinny, her mouth extensive, her teeth straggling and loose, of various colours and conformation; and her long neck shrivelled into a thousand wrinkles-In her temper, she is proud, stiff, vain, imperious, prying, malicious, greedy and uncharitable. In all likelihood, her natural aufterity has been foured by disappointment in love; for her long celibacy is by no means owing to her diflike of matrimony: on the contrary, she has left no stone unturned to avoid the reproachful epithet of oid maid.

Before I was born, she had gone such lengths in the way of flirting with a recruiting officer that her reputation was a little finged. She afterwards made advances to the curate of the parish, who dropped fome diffant hints about the next prefentation to the living, which was in her brother's gift, but finding that was already promifed to another, he flew of at a tangent; and Mrs Tabby, in revenge, found means to deprive him of his cure. Her next lover was a lieutenant of a man of war, a relation of the family, who did not understand the refinement of her passion, and expressed no averfion to grapple with cousin Tabby in the way of marriage; but before matters could be properly adjusted, he went out on a cruise, and was killed in an engagement with a French frigate. Our aunt, though taid all her inares for Dr Lewis, who is the fides Achates of my uncle. She even fell fick upon the occasion behalf with his friend; but the Doctor, being a shy cock, would not be caught with chaff, and flatly rejected the proposal; so that Mrs Tabitha was content to exert her patience once more, after having endeavoured in vain to effect a rupture betwixt the two friends; and now she thinks proper to be very civil to Lewis, who is become necessary to her in the way of his profession.

These, however, are not the only efforts she has made towards a nearer conjunction with our fex. Her fortune was originally no more than a thousand pounds; but she gained an accession of five hundred by the death of a fifter, and the lieutenant left her three hundred in his will. These sums the has more than doubled, by living free of all expence, in her brother's house; and dealing in cheese and Welsh flannel, the produce of his flocks and dairy. At prefent her capital is increased to about four thousand pounds; and her avarice feems to grow, every day more and more rapacious; but even this is not fo intolerable, as the perverfeness of her nature, which keeps the whole family in disquiet and uproar. She is one of those geniuses who find some diabolical enjoyment in being dreaded and detefted by their fellow creatures.

I once told my uncle, I was furprifed that a man of his disposition could bear such a domestic plague, when it could be so easily removed——The remark made him fore, because it seemed to tax him with want of resolution——Wrinkling up his nose, and drawing down his eye brows, "A young sellow, " (said he) when he first thrusts his snout into the "world, is apt to be surprised at many things which "a man of experience knows to be ordinary and un"avoidable——This precious aunt of yours is become intensibly a part of my constitution—— which I cannot bear to be touched or tampered " with." I made no reply; but shifted the converfation. He really has an affection for this original, which maintains its ground in defiance of common Tenfe, and in despite of that contempt which he must certainly feel for her character and understanding. Nay, I am convinced, that the has likewife a most virulent attachment to his perfon; though her love never shews itself but in the shape of discontent; and the perfifts in tormenting him out of mere tendernels The only object within doors upon which the bestows any marks of affection, in the usual stile, is her dog Chowder; a filthy cur from Newfoundland, which she had in a prefent from the wife of a skipper in Swanfey -- One would imagine the had diftinguifhed this beaft with her favour on account of his ugliness and ill nature; if it was not, indeed, an instinctive sympathy, between his disposition and her own. Certain it is, the careffes him without ceating; and even haraffes the family in the fervices of this curfed animal, which, indeed, has proved the proximate cause of her breach with Sir Ulic Mackilligut.
"Damn her! She's a noli me tangere in my slesh,

intruder and his mittress, gave the former such a kick in the jaws, as sent him howling to the door.

Mrs Tabitha, incensed at this outrage, ran after him squalling in a tone equally disagreeable; while the Baronet sollowed her on one side, making apologies for his mistake; and Derrick on the other, making remonstrances upon the rules and regulations of the place.

Far from being fatisfied with the Knight's excuses, the faid the was fure he was no gentleman; and when the Master of the Ceremonies offered to hand her into the chair, fhe rapped him over the knuckles with her fan. My uncle's footman being still at the door, she and Chowder got into the same vehicle, and were carried off amidst the jokes of the chairman and other populace-I had been riding out on Clerken. down, and happened to enter just as the fracus was over___The Baronet coming up to me with an affected air of chagrin, recounted the adventures; at which I laughed heartily, and then his countenance cleared up. "My dear foul, (faid he) when I faw a " fort of a wild baift, fnarling with open mouth at " the Master of the Ceremonies, like the red cow " going to devour Tom Thumb, I could do no lefs " than go to the affistance of the little man; but I " never dreamt the baift was one of Mrs Bram-" ble's attendants___O! if I had, he might have " made his breakfast upon Derrick and welcome-" ____but, you know, my dear friend, how natural "it is for us Irishmen to blunder, and to take the " wrong fow by the ear-However, I will confess "judgment, and cry her mercy; and, 'tis to be " hoped, a penitent finner may be forgiven." I told him, that as the offence was not voluntary of his fide, it was to be hoped he would not find her implacable.

But, in truth, all this concern was diffembled, in his approaches of gallantry to Mrs Tabitha, he had been misled by a mistake of at least fix thoufand pounds in the calculation of her fortune; and in this particular he was just undeceived. He, therefore, feized the first opportunity of incurring her displeasure decently, in such a manner as would certainly annihilate the correspondence; and he could not have taken a more effectual method, than that of beating her dog. When he prefented himfelf at our door, to pay his respects to the offended fair, he was refused admittance; and given to understand, that he should never find her at home for the future. She was not so inaccessable to Derrick, who came to demand fatisfaction for the infult the had offered to him, even in the verge of his own court. She knew it was convenient to be well with the Master of the Ceremonies, while she continued to frequent the Rooms; and, having heard he was a poet, began to be afraid of making her appearance in a ballad or lampoon. She therefore made excuses for what she had done, imputing it to the flutter of her spirits; and subscribed handsomely for his poems: fo that he was perfectly appealed, and overwhelmed her with a profusion of compliments. He even folicited a reconciliation with Chowder; which, however the latter declined; and he declared, that if he could find a precedent in the annals of the Bath, which he would carefully examine for that purpose, her favourite should be admitted to the next public breakfasting-But I believe, the will not expose herself or him to the risque of a second difgrace-Who will supply the place of Mackilligut in her affections, I cannot foresee; but nothing in the shape of a man can come amifs. Though she is a violent church-woman, of the most intolerant zeal, I believe in my conscience she would have no objection, at prefent, to treat on the score of matrimony with an Anabaptist, Quaker,

Quaker, or Jew; and even ratify the treaty, at the expence of her own conversion. But, perhaps, I think too hardly of this kinswoman; who, I must own, is very little beholden to the good opinion of

JER. MELFORD.

To Dr LEWIS.

TOU ask me, why I dont take the air a-horseback. during this fine weather?-In which of the avenues of this paradife would you have me take that exercife? Shall I commit myfelf to the highroads of London or Briftol, to be stifled with dust, or pressed to death in the midft of post-chaifes, flying-machines, waggons, and coal-horses; besides the troops of fine gentlemen that take to the high-way to shew their horsemanship; and the coaches of fine ladies, who go thither to shew their equipage? Shall I attempt the Downs, and fatigue mylelf to death in climbing up an eternal afcent, without any hopes of reaching the fummit? Know then, I have made divers desperate leaps at those upper regions; but I always fell backward into this vapour pit, exhausted and dispirited by taose ineffectual efforts; and here we poor veletudinarians pant and struggle, like to many Chinese gudgeons, gasping in the bottom of a punch bowl. By Heaven. it is a kind of enchantment! If I do not speedily break the spell, and escape, I may chance to give up the ghost in this nauseous shew of corruption-It was but two nights ago, that I had like to have made my public exit at a minutes warning. my greatest weaknesses is that of suffering myself to be over-ruled by the opinion of people, whose judgment I despise—I own, with shame and confusion of face, that importunity of any kind I cannot resist. This want of courage and constancy is an original slaw in my nature, which you must have often observed with compassion, if not with contempt. I am afraid some of our boasted virtues may be traced up to this desect.

Without further preamble, I was persuaded to go to a ball, on purpose to see Liddy dance a minuet with a young petulent jackanapes, the only fon of a wealthy undertaker from London, whose mother lodges in our neighbourhood, and has contracted an acquaintance with Tabby. I fat a couple of long hours, half stifled in the midst of a noisome crowd; and could not help wondering, that fo many hundreds of those that rank as rational creatures, could find entertainment in feeing a fuccelfion of infipid animals, describing the same dull figure for a whole evening, on an area, not much bigger than a taylor's shop-board. If there had been any beauty, grace, activity, magnificent drefs, or variety of any kind, however abfurd, to engage the attention, and amuse the fancy, I should not have been furprifed; but there was no fuch object; it was a tirefome repetition of the fame languid, frivolous scene, performed by actors that seemed to fleep in all their motions The continual fwimming of those phantoms before my eyes, gave me a fwimming of the head; which was also affeeted by the fouled air, circulating through fuch a number of rotten human bellows____I therefore retreated towards the door, and flood in the paffage to the next room, talking to my friend Quin; when an end being put to the minuets, the benches were removed to make way for the countrydances; and the multitude rifing at once, the whole whole atmosphere was put in commotion. Then, all of a sudden, came sushing upon me an Egyptian gale, so impregnated with pestilential vapours, that my nerves were overpowered, and I dropt senseless upon the floor.

You may easily conceive what a clamour and confusion this accident must have produced in such an affembly ____ I foon recovered, however, and found myself in an easy chair, supported by my own people Sifter Tabby, in her great tendernefs, had put me to the torture, fqueezing my head under her arm, stuffing my nose with the spirit of hartshorn, till the whole infide was excoriated. I no fooner got home, than I fent for Doctor Ch. who affured me, I needed not be alarmed for my fwooning was entirely occasioned by an accidental impression of fetid effluvia upon nerves of uncommon fenfibility. I know not how other people's nerves are constructed; but one would imagine they must be made of very coarse materials, to stand the shock of such a horrid affault. It was, indeed, a compound of villainous smells, in which the most violent frinks, and the most powerful perfumes, contended for the maftery. Imagine to yourfelf a high exalted effence of mingled odours, ariting from putrid gums, imposthumated lungs, four flatulencies, rank arm-pits, fweating feet, running fores and iffues; plasters, ointments, and embrocations, hungary water, spirit of lavender, affafætida drops, mulk, hartshorn, and sal volatile; besides a thoufand frowzy freams, which I could not analyle; Such, O Dick! is the fragrant æther we breathe in the polite affemblies of Bath Such is the atmosphere I have exchanged for the pure, clastic, animating air of the Welsh mountains ____ O Rus, quando te aspiciam !- I wonder what the devil posset-. fed me_But few words are best; I have taken my Vol. I. refolution resolution You may well suppose I don't intend to entertain the company with a fecond exhibition-I have promifed, in an evil hour, to proceed to London, and that promise shall be performed; but my flay in the metropolis shall be brief. I have, for the benefit of my health, projected an expedition to the North, which, I hope, will afford some agreeable pastime. I have never travelled farther that way than Scarborough; and, I think, it is a reproach upon me, as a British freeholder, to have lived so long without making an excursion to the other side of the Tweed. Besides, I have some relations settled in Yorkshire, to whom it may not be improper to introduce my nephew and his fifter, At prefent, I have nothing to add, but that Tabby is happily difentangled from the Irish Baronet; and that I will not fail to make you acquainted, from time to time, with the fequel of our adventures ! a mark of confideration, which, perhaps, you would willingly dispense with in

Your humble fervant, -

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR PHILLIPS.

A FEW days ago we were terribly alarmed by my uncle's fainting at the ball—He has been ever fince curfing his own folly, for going thither at the request of an impertinent woman. He declares he will sooner visit a house infected with the placue, than trust himself in such a nauseous nauseous spital for the future, for he swears the accident was occasioned by the stench of the crowd; and that he would never defire a stronger proof of our being made of very groß materials, than our having withstood the annovance, by which he was fo much discomposed. For my part, I am very thankful for the coarfeness of my organs, being in no danger of ever falling a facrifice to the delicacy of my nofe. Mr Bramble is extravagantly delicate in all his fenfations, both of foul and body. I was informed by Dr Lewis, that he once fought a duel with an officer of the horse-guards, for turning afide to the Park wall on a necessary occasion, when he was passing with a Lady under his protection. His blood rifes at every instance of insolence and cruelty, even where he himfelf is no way concerned; and ingratitude makes his teeth chatter. On the other hand, the recital of a generous, humane, or grateful action, never fails to draw from him tears of approbation, which he is often greatly distressed to conceal.

Yesterday, one Paunceford gave tea, on particular invitation. This man, after having been long buffeted. by Adversity, went abroad; and Fortune resolved to make him amends for her former coynefs, fet him all at once up to the very ears in affluence. He has now emerged from obscurity, and blazes out in all the tinfel of the times. I don't find that he is charged with any practices that the law deems dithoneit, or that his wealth has made him arrogant and inaccefiible; on the contrary, he takes great pains to appear affable and gracious. But they fay, he is remarkable for shrinking from his former friendthips, which were generally too plain and homeipun to appear amidst leis present brilliant connexions; and that he feems uneafy at fight of fome old benefactors, whom a man of honour Iz .would would take pleafure to acknowledge____Be that as it may, he had so eff ctually engaged the company at Bath, that when I wen with my uncle to the coffeehouse in the evening, there was not a foul in the room but one person, seemingly in years, who sat by the fire, reading one of the papers. Mr Bramble, taking his stations close by him, "There is such a crowd and confusion of chairs in the passage to Simpson's, " (faid he) that we could hardly get along --"I wish these missions of fortune would fall upon " more laudable ways of spending their money-" I suppose, Sir, you like this kind of entertainment " as little as I do?" " I can't fay I have any great " relish for such entertainments," answered the other, without taking his eyes of the paper-Mr Serle, (refumed my uncle) I beg pardon for " interrupting you; but I can't refift the curiofity I " have to know if you have received a card on this " occasion?"

The man feemed furprifed at this address, and made fome paule, as doubtful what answer he should make, " I know my curiofity is impertinent, (added my un-" cle) but I have a particular reason for asking the fa-" vour." " If that be the case, (replied Mr Serle) "I shall gratify you without hesitation, by owning, " that I have had no card. But, give me leave, Sir, " to alk in my turn, what reason you think I have to expect fuch an invitation from the gentleman who " gives tea?" I have my own reasons; (cried Mr "Bramb e, with fome emotion) and am convinced or more than ever, that this Paunceford is a contemp-"tible fellow." "Sir, (faid the other, laying down " the paper) I have not the honour to know you, but " your discourse is a little mysterious, and seems to " require fome explanation. The person you are " pleased to treat so cavalierly, is a gentleman of some confequence

"consequence in the community; and, for aught you know, I may also have my particular reasons for desending his character————" "If I was not convinced of the contrary, (observed the other) I should not have gone so far———" "Let me tell you, Sir, (said the stranger, raising his voice) you have gone too far in hazarding such reflections——"

Here he was interrupted by my uncle; who asked peevish'y, if he was Don Quixote enough at this time of day, to throw down his gauntler as champion for a man who had treated him with fuch ungrateful neglect. " For my part, (added he) I shall never quar-" rel with you again upon this subject; and what I " have faid now, has been fuggefted as much by my " regard for you, as by my contempt of him ----" Mr. Serle, then pulling off his spectacles, eyed uncle very earnestly, faying, in a mitigated tone, "Surely "I am much obliged --- Ah, Mr. Bramble! I now "recollect your feature, though I have not feen "you these many years." "We might have been "lefs strangers to one another, (answered the 'fquire) "if our correspondence had not been interrupted, in " confequence of a mifunderstanding occasioned by this very _____ But no matter____Mr. Serle, "I esteem your character; and my frien thip, such 'as it is, you may freely command. "The offer " is too agreeable to be declined, (faid he); I em-" brace it very cordially; and, as the first fruits of " it, request that you will change the subject, which, " with me, is a matter of peculiar delicacy."

My uncle owned he was in the right, and the discourse took a more general turn. Mr. Serle pussed the evening with us at our lodgings; and appeared to be intelligen, and even entertaining; but his disposition was rather of a melancholy hue. My uncle fays he is a man of uncommon parts, an lunquestioned probity; that his fortune, which was originally finall, has been greatly hurt by a romantic spirit of generosity, which he has ofter displayed, even at the expence of his discretion, in favour of worthless individuals ____ That he had refcued Paunceford from the lowest distress, when he was bankrupt, both in means and reputation-That he had espoused his interest with a degree of enthusias, broke with several friends and even drawn his fword against my uncle, who had particular reasons for questioning the moral character of the faid Paunceford : that, without Serle's countenance and affiftance, the other never could have embraced the opportunity, which has raifed him to this pinnacle of wealth; that Paunceford, in the first transports of his succe's, had written, from abroad, letters to different correspondents, owning his obligations to Mr. Serle, in the warmest terms of acknowledgment, and declaring he confidered himfelf only a factor for the occasion of his best friend: that, without doubt, he had made declarations of the same nature to his benefactor himself, though this last was always filent and reserved on the subject; but for some years, those tropes and figures of rhetoric had been disused: that, upon his return to England, he had been lavish in his careffes to Mr. Serle, invited him to his house, and pressed him to make it his own: that he had overwhelmed him with general professions, and affected to express the warmest regard for him, in company of their common acquaintance; fo that every body believed his gratitude was as liberal as his fortune; and some went so far as to congratulate Mr. Serle on both.

avoided particular discussions with his old patron, who had too much spirit to drop the most distant hint of balancing the account of obligation: that, nevertheless, a man of his feelings could not but refent this shocking return for all his kindness; and, therefore, he withdrew himfelf from the connexion, without coming to the least explanation, or speaking a fyllable on the subject to any living foul; so that now their correspondence is reduced to a flight salute with the hat, when they chance to meet in any public place; an accident that rarely happens, for their walks lie different ways. Mr. Paunceford lives in a palace, feeds upon dainties, is arrayed in fumptuous -apparel, appears in all the pomp of equipage, and paffes his time among the nobles of the land. Serle lodges in Stall-street, up two pair of stairs backwards, walks a foot in a bath rug, eats for twelve fhillings a-week, and drinks water as a prefervative against the gout and gravel-Mark the viciffitude. Paunceford once refided in a garret; where he subfifted upon sheep's-trotters and cow-heel, from which commons he was translated to the table of Serle, that ever abounded with good cheer; until want of economy and retention, reduced him to a flender annuity in his decline of years, that scarce affords the bare necessaries of life-Paunceford, however, does him the honour to speak of him still, with uncommon regard; and to declare what pleafure it would give him to contribute in any shape to his convenience: " But you "know, (he never fails to add) he's a shy kind of a "man -- And then fuch a perfect philosopher, "that he looks upon all superfluities with the most · fovereign contempt."

Having given you this sketch of 'squire Paunceford, I need not make any comment on his character, but leave it at the mercy of your own reflection; from which, I dare fay, it will meet with as little quarter as it has found with

To Mrs MARY JONES, at Brambleton-hall.

DEAR MOLLY,

WE are all upon the ving-Hey for London, girl! -Fecks! we have been long enough here; for we're all turned tipfy turvy-Mistress has excarded. Sir Ulic for kicking of Chowder; and I have fent O Frizzle away, with a flea in his ear-I've shewn him how little I minded his tinfy and his long tail-A feilor who would think for to go, for to offer, to take up with a dirty trollop under my nofe__I ketched him in the very feet, coming out of the house-maid's garret .- But I have gi'en the dirty flut a fiferary. () Molly! the farvants at Bath are devils in garnet. They lite the candle at both ends-Here's nothing but ginketting and wasting, and thieving, and tricking, and trigging; and then they are never content -They wont suffer the 'squire and mistress to stay any longer; because they have been already above three weeks in the house; and they look for a couple of ginneys a-piece at our going away; and this is a parquisite they expect every month in the season; being as how no family has a right to flay longer than four weeks in the fame lodgings; and fo the cuck fwears, she will pin the dish clout to mistress's tail; and the house-maid vows, she'll put cowitch in malter's bed, if so be he don't discamp without furder ado -I don't blame them for making the most of their market, in the way of vails and parquifites; and I dely the devil to fay I am a tail-carrier, or ever brought a poor farvant into trouble-But then they oft to have fome conscience, in vronging those that be farvants like themselves ---- For you must no, Molly, I miffed three quarters of blond lace, and a remnant of moffin, and my filver thimble; which was the gift of true love : they were all in my work basket, that I left upon the table in the farvants hall, when mistreffes bell rung; but if they had been under lock and kay, t'would have been all the fame; for there are double kays to all the locks in Bath; and they fay as how the very teeth an't fafe in your head, if you fleep with your mouth open ____ And fo fays I to myfelf, them things could not go without bands; and fo I'll watch their waters: And fo I did with a vitness; for then it was I found Bett consarned with O Frizzle. And as the cuck had thrown her flash at me, because I had taken part with Chowder, when he fit with the turnspit, I resolved to make a clear kitchen, and throw some of her fat into the fire. I ketched the chare-woman going out with her load in the morning, before the thought I was up, and brought her to mistress with her whole cargo -Marry, what do'ft think the had got in the name of God? Her buckets were foaming full of our. best beer, and her lap was stuffed with a cold tongue, part of a buttock of beef, half a turkey, and a fwinging lump of butter, and the matter of ten moulded kandles, that had fearce ever been lit. The cuck brazened it out, and faid, it was her rite to rummage the pantry; and the was ready for to go before the mare: that he had been her potricary many years, and would never think of hurting a poor farvant, for giving away the scraps of the kitchen --- I went another way to work with madam Betty, because the lrad been faucy, and called me ikan lelus names; and faid O Frizzle couldn't abide me, and twenty other odorous falfehoods.

hoods. I got a varrant from the mare, and her box being farched by the conftable, my things came out fure enuff; besides a full pound of vax candles, and a nite-cap of mistress, that I could sware to on my cruperal oas—O! then Madam Mopstick came upon her merry bones; and as the squire woudn't hare of a pursecution, she escaped a skewering: but, the longest day she has to live, she'll remember your

If the hind should come again, before we be gone, pray send me the shift and apron, with the vite gallow manky shoes; which you'll find in my pillober—Sarvice to Saul—

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart, of Jesus College, Oxon.

YOU are in the right, dear Phillips; I don't expect regular answers to every letter—I know a college-life is too circumscribed to afford materials for such quick returns of communication. For my part, I am continually shifting the scene, and surrounded with new objects; seeme of which are striking enough. I shall therefore conclude my journal for your amusement; and though, in all appearance, it will not treat of very important or interesting particulars, it may prove, perhaps, not altogether uninstructive and unentertaining.

The music and entertainments of Bath are over for this season; and all our gay birds of passage have taken their flight to Bristol well, Tunbridge, Brightthelmstone, Scarborough, Harrowgate, &c. Not a foul is seen in this place, but a few broken-winded parfons, waddling like so many crows along the North Parade. There is always a great shew of the clergy at Bath; none of your thin, puny, yellow, hestic sigures, exhausted with abstinence and hard study, labouring under the morbi eruditorum; but great overgrown dignitaries and restors, with rubicund noses and gouty ankles, or broad bloated faces, dragging along great swag bellies; the emblems of sloth and indigestion-

Now we are upon the subject of parsons, I must tell you a ludricous adventure, which was atchieved the other day by Tom Eaftgate, whom you may remember on the foundation of Queen's. He had been very affiduous to pin himfelf upon George Prankley, who was a gentleman commoner of Christ church, knowing the faid Prankley was heir to a confiderable estate, and would have the advowfon of a good living, the incumbent of which was very old and infirm. He ftudied his passions, and flattered them so effectually, as to become his companion and counfellor; and at last obtained of him a promise of the presentation, when the living should fall. Prankley, on his uncle's death, quitted Oxford, and made his first appearance in the fashionable world at London; from whence he came lately to Bath, where he has been exhibiting himfelf among the bucks and gamesters of the place. Eastgate followed him hither; but he should not have quitted him for a moment, at his first emerging into life. He ought to have known he was a fantastic, foolish, fickle fellow, who would forget his college-attachments the moment they ceafed appealing to his fenses. Tom met with a cold reception from his old friend; and was, moreover, inf rmed, that he had promifed the living to another man, who had a vote in the county, where he proposed posed to offer himself a candidate at the next general election. He now remembered nothing of Eastgate, but the freedoms he had used to take with him, while Tom had quietly stood his butt, with an eve to the benefice; and those freedoms he began to repeat in common place farcafnis on his perfon and his cloth, which he uttered in the public coffee-house, for the entertainment of the company. But he was egregiously mistaken in giving his own wit credit for that tameness of Eastgate, which had been entirely owing to prudential confiderations. These being now removed, he retorted his repartee with interest, and found no great difficulty in turning the laugh upon the aggreffer; whe, lofing his temper, called him names, and asked, If he knew whom he talked to? After much altercation, Prankley, shaking his cane, bid him hold his tongue, otherwife he would dust his caffock for him. " have no pretensions to fuch a valet (faid Tom); " but if you should do me that office, and overheat " yourfelf, I have here a good oaken towel at your " fervice."

Prankley was equally incensed and consounded at this reply. After a moment's pause, he took him asside towards the window; and pointing to the clump of fir on Clerken-down, asked in a whisper, if he had spirit enough to meet him there, with a case of pistols, at six o'clock to-morrow morning, Eastgate answered to the affirmative; and, with a steady countenance, assured him, he would not fail to give him the rendezvous at the hour he mentioned. So saying, he retired; and the challenger stayed some time in manifest agitation. In the morning, Eastgate, who knew his man, and had taken his resolution, went to Prankley's lodgings, and roused him by sive o'clock—

The 'fquire, in all probability, curfed his puncvality in his heart, but he affected to talk big;

and having prepared his artillery over night, they croffed the water at the end of the South parade. In their progress up the hill, Prankley often eyed the parson, in hopes of perceiving some reluctance in his countenance; but as no fuch marks appeared, he attempted to intimidate him by word of mouth. "If "thefe flints do their office, (faid he), I'll do thy bu-" finess in a few minutes." "I defire you will do " your best (replied the other); for my part, I come " not here to trifle. Our lives are in the hands of "God, and one of us already totters on the brink of " eternity-" This remark feemed to make fome impression upon the 'fquire, who changed countenance, and with a faultering accent observed, " That it ill " became a elergyman, to be concerned in quarrels " and blood-shed ___ " " Your insolence to me " (faid Eastgate) I should have bore with patience. " had not you cast the most infamous reflections up-" on my order, the honour of which I think myfelf " in duty bound to maintain, even at the expence of "my heart's blood; and furely it can be no crime to " put out of the world a profligate wretch, without " any fenfe of principle, morality, or religion "Thou may'ft take away my life, (cried Prankley, in " great perturbation) but don't go to murder my cha-" racter .- What ! has't got no confcience !" " My " conscience is perfectly quiet (replied the other); " and now, Sir, we are upon the fpot-Take your " ground as near as you please; prime your pistol; " and the Lord, of his infinite mercy, have compaf-" fion upon your miserable foul!"

This ejaculation he pronounced in a loud folemn tone, with his hat off and his eyes lifted up; then drawing a large horse-pistol, he presented, and put himself in a posture of action. Prankley took his distance, and endeavoured to prime, but his hand shook with such violence, that he found this epe-VOL. I.

ration impractable—His antagonist, seeing how it was with him, offered his affistance, and advanced for that purpose; when the poor 'squire, exceedingly alarmed at what he had heard and seen, desired the action might be deferred till next day, as he had not settled his affairs. "I han't made my will "(said he); my sisters are not provided for; and I "just new recollect an old promise, which my conficience tells me I ought to perform—I'll first controllect thee, that I'm not a wretch without principle, and then thou shalt have an opportunity to "take my life, which thou seemest to thirst after so

Eastgate understood the hint; and told him, that one day should break no squares; adding, " forbid that I should be the means of hindering " you from acting the part of an honest man, and a dutiful brother—" By virtue of this ceffation, they returned peaceably together. Prankley forthwith made out the prefentation of the living, and delivered it to Eastgate, telling him at the same time, he had now fettled his affairs, and was ready to attend him to the Fir grove; but Tom declared he could not think of lifting his hand against the life of fo great a benefactor-He did more: when they next met at the coffee-house, he asked pardon of Mr Prankley, if in his passion he had said any thing to give him offence; and the 'fquire was fo gracious as to forgive him with a cordial shake of the hand, declaring that he did not like to be at variance, with an old college companion-Next day. however he left Bath abruptly; and then Eaftgate told me all these particulars, not a little pleased with the effects of his own fagacity, by which he has fecured a living worth 1601. per annum.

Of my uncle, I have nothing at present to say, but that we set out to-morrow for London en famile. He and the ladies, with the maid and Chowder in a coach;

a coach; I and the man-servant a horseback. The particulars of our journey you shall have in my next, provided no accident happens to prevent,

To Dr LEWIS.

DEAR DICK, I SHALL to-morrow fet out for London, where I have bespoke lodgings, at Mrs Norton's in Goldenfquare. Although I am no admirer of Bath, I shall leave it with regret; because I must part with some old friends, whom, in all probability, I shall never see again .- In the course of coffee-house conversation, I had often heard very extraordinary encomiums paffed on the performances of Mr. T - a gentleman refiding in this place, who paints landscapes for his amusement. As I have no great confidence in the tafte and judgment of coffee-house connoisseurs, and never received much pleasure from this branch of the art, those general praises made no impression at all on my curiofity; but at the request of a particular friend, I went yesterday to see the pieces, which had been so warmly commended-I must own I am no judge of painting, though very fond of pictures. I don't imagine that my senses would play me so false, as to betray me into admiration of any thing that was very bad; but, true it is, I have often overlooked capital beauties, in pieces of extraordinary merit ____ If I am not totally devoid of tafte, however, this young gentleman of Bath is the best landscape-painter now living: I was struck with his performances in such a manner, as I had never been by painting before. K 2

His trees have not only a richness of soliage and warmth of colouring, which delights the view; but also a certain magnificence in the disposition, and spirit in the expression, which I cannot describe. His management of the chiaro obscure, or light and shadow, especially gleams of sun-shine, is altogether wonderful, both in the contrivance and execution; and he is so happy in his perspective, and marking his distances at sea, by a progressive series of ships, vessels, capes, and promontories, that I could not help thinking, I had a distant view of thirty leagues upon the back-ground of the picture. If there is any taste for ingenuity lest in a degenerate age, fast sinking into barbarism, this artist, I apprehend, will make a capital figure, as soon as his works are known—

Two days ago, I was favoured with a visit by Mr Fitz-owen; who, with great formality, folicited my vote and interest at the general election. I ought not have been shocked at the confidence of this man; though it was remarkable, confidering what had paffed between him and me on a former occation These visits are mere matter of form, which a candidate makes to every elector; even to those who, he knows, are engaged in the interest of his competitor, lest he should expose himself to the imputation of pride, at a time when it is expected he should appear humble. Indeed, I know nothing fo abject as the behaviour of a man canvaffing for a feat in parliament____This mean proftration, (to borough-electors especially,) has, I imagine, contributed in a great measure to raise that spirit of insolence among the vulgar; which, like the devil, will be found very difficult to lay. Be that as it may, I was in some confusion at the effrontery of Fitz-owen; but I foon recollected myfelf, and told him, I had not yet determined for whom I should give my vote, nor whether I should SVIB give it for any.——The truth is, I look upon both candidates in the same light; and should think myself a traitor to the constitution of my country, if I voted for either. If every elector would bring the same consideration home to his conscience, we should not have such reason to exclaim against the venality of p——t's. But we are all a pack of venal and corrupted rascals; so lost to all sense of honesty, and all tenderness of character, that, in a little time, I am fully persuaded, nothing will be insamous but virtue and public spirit.

G. H .___, who is really an enthusiast in patriotism, and represented the capital in several successive parliaments, and declared to me t'other day, with the tears in his eyes, that he had lived above thirty years in the city of London, and dealt in the way of commerce. with all the citizens of note in their turns; but that, as he should answer to God, he had never, in the whole course of his life, found above three or four whom he could call thoroughly honest: a declaration, which was rather mortifying than furprifing to me, who have found fo few men of worth in the course of my acquaintance, that they ferve only as exceptions; which, in the grammarian's phrase, confirm and prove a general canon-I know you will fay, G. H .-faw imperfectly through the mift of prejudice, and I am rankled by the spleen-Perhaps you are partly in the right; for I have perceived that my opinion of mankind, like mercury in the thermometer, rifes and falls according to the variations of the weather.

Pray fettle accompts with Barns; take what money of mine is in his hands and give him acquittance. If you think Davis has flock or credit enough to do justice to the farm, give him a discharge for the rent that is due; that will animate his industry; for I know that nothing is so discouraging to a farmer, as the thoughts of being in arrears with his landlord. He becomes dispirited, and neglects his labour; and fo the farm goes to wreck. Tabby has been clamouring for fome days about the lamb's fkin, which Williams, the bind, begged of me, when he was last at Bath. Prithee take it back, paying the fellow the full value of it, that I may have fome peace in my own house; and let him keep his own counsel, if he means to keep his place O! I shall never prefume to despise or censure any poor man, for fuffering himself to be henpecked; conscious how I myself am obliged to truckle to a domestic dæmon; even though (bleffed be God) she is not yoked with me for life, in the matrimonial waggon-She has quarrelled with the fervants of the house about vails; and fuch intolerable fcolding enfued on both fides, that I have been fain to appeafe the cook and chambermaid by stealth. Can't you find fome poor gentleman of Wales, to take this precious commodity off the hands of

Yours.

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Dr LEWIS.

DOCTOR LEWS,

GIVE me leaf to tell you, methinks you mought employ your talons better, than to encourage fervants to pillage their mafters—I find by Gwyllim, that Villiams has get my skin; for which he is an impotent rascal. He has not only get my skin, but moreover my butter-nilk to satten his pigs; and, I suppose, the next thing he gets will be my pad to carry his daughter to church and sair: Roger gets this, and Roger gets that; but I'd have you to know,

I won't

I won't be rogered at this rate by any ragmatical fellow in the kingdom-And I am furprifed, Doctor Lews, you would offer to put my affairs in composition with the refuge and fkim of the hearth. I have toiled and moyled to a good purpuls, for the advantage of Matt's family, if I can't fafe as much owl as will make me an under petticoat. As for the buttermilk, ne'er a pig in the parish shall thrust his snout in it, with my good will. There's a famous Physician at the Hot-Well, that prescribes it to his patients, when the case is consumptive; and the Scots and Irish have begun to drink it already, in fuch quantities, that there is not a drop left for the hogs in the whole neighbourhood of Briftol. I'll have our butter milk barrelled up, and fent twice a-week to Aberginny, where it may be fold for a half-penny the quart; and fo Roger may carry his pigs to another market_I hope, Docter, you will not go to put any more fuch phims in my brother's head, to the prejudice of my pockat; but rather give me fome raitins (which hitherto you have not done) to subscribe myself

Your humble fervant.

TAB. BRAMBLE.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, of Jefus College, Oxon.

DEAR PHILLIPS,

7 ITHOUT waiting for your answer to my last, I proceed to give you an account of our journey to London, which has not been wholly barren of adventure. Tuefday last, the 'fquire took his place in a hired coach and four, accompanied by his fifter and mine, and Mrs Tabby's maid, Winifred Jenkins, whose province it was to support

Chowder

Chowder on a cushion in her lap. I could scarce refrain from laughing, when I looked into the vehicle, and saw that animal sitting opposite to my uncle, like any other passenger. The squire, ashaned of his situation, blushed to the eyes: and, calling the postilions to drive on, pulled the glass up in my face. I, and his servant John Thomas, attended them on horseback.

Nothing worth mentioning occured, till we arrived on the edge of Marlborough Downs. There one of the fore-horses fell, in going down hill at a round trot; and the postilion behind, endeavouring to stop the carriage, pulled it on one fide into a deep rut, where it was fairly overturned. I had rode on about two hundred yards before; but hearing a loud fcream, galloped back and dismounted, to give what affistance was in my power. When I looked into the coach, I could fee nothing diffinctly, but the nether end of Jenkins, who was kicking her heels and fqualling with great vociferation. All of a fudden, my uncle thrust up his bare pate, and bolted through the window, as nimble as a grashopper, having made use of poor Win's posteriors as a step to rife in his ascent -The man (who had likewife quitted his horse) dragged this forlorn damsel, more dead than alive, through the same opening. Then Mr. Bramble, pulling the door off its hinges with a jerk, laid hold on Liddy's arm, and brought her to the light; very much frighted, but little hurt. It fell to my share to deliver our aunt Tabitha, who had loft her cap in the ftruggle; and being rather more than half frantic, with rage and terror, was no bad representation of one of the fifter Furies that guard the gates of hell-She expressed no fort of concern for her brother, who ran about in the cold, without his periwig, and worked with the most aftonishing agility, in helping to disentangle the the horses from the carriage: but she cried, in a tone of distraction, "Chowder! Chowder! my "dear Chowder! my poor Chowder is certainly kil"led!"

This was not the cafe—Chowder, after having tore my uncle's leg in the confusion of the fall, had retreated under the feat, and from thence the footman drew him by the neck; for which good office he bit his fingers to the bone. The fellow, who is naturally furly, was fo provoked at this affault, that he faluted his ribs with a hearty kick, exclaiming, " Damn the nasty fon of a bitch, and them " he belongs to !" A benediction, which was by no means loft upon the implacable virago his mistress. Her brother, however, prevailed upon her, to retire into a peafant's house, near the scene of action, where his head and hers were covered, and poor Jenkins had a fit ---- Our next care was to apply some sticking-plaister to the wound in his leg, which exhibited the impression of Chowder's teeth; but he never opened his lips against the delinquent - Mrs Tabby, alarmed at this fcene, "You fay nothing, Matt (cried she); but I know "your mind___I know the fpite you have to that "poor unfortunate animal! I know you intend to "take his life away!" "You are mistaken, upon " my honour ! (replied the 'fquire, with a farcastic " fmile) I should be incapable of harbouring any "fuch cruel defign against an object so amiable and " inoffentive; even if he had not the happiness to " be your favourite."

John Thomas was not fo delicate. The fellow, whether really alarmed for his life, or infligated by the defire of revenge, came in, and bluntly demanded, that the dog should be put to death; on the supposition, that if ever he should run mad hereafter, he, who had been bit by him, would be infected—My uncle calmly argued upon the absurdity of his opinion, observing, that he himself was in the same predicament, and would certainly take the precaution he proposed, if he was not sure he ran no risque of insection. Nevertheless Thomas continued obstinate; and, at length, declared, that if the dog was not shot immediately, he himself would be his executioner———This declaration opened the slood. gates of Tabby's eloquence, which would have shamed the first-rate oratress of Billingsgate. The sootman retorted in the same stile; and the squire dismissed him from his service, after having prevented me from giving him a good horse-whipping for his insolence.

The coach being adjusted, another difficulty occurred ____Mrs. Tabitha absolutely refused to enter it again, unless another driver could be found to take the place of the postilion; who, she affirmed, had overturned the carriage from malice aforethought After much dispute, the man resigned his place to a shabby country fellow, who undertook to go as far as Marlborough, where they could be better provided; and at that place we arrived about one o'clock, without farther impediment. Mrs Bramble, however, found new matter of offence; which, indeed, fhe had a particular genius for extracting at will from almost every incident in life. We had scarce entered the room at Marlborough, where we stayed to dine, when the exibited a formal complaint against the poor fellow who had superfeded the postilion. She faid, he was fuch a beggarly rafcal, that he had ne'er a shirt to his back; and had the impudence to shock her fight by shewing his bare pofteriors, for which act of indelicacy he deferved to be fet in the stocks. Mrs Winifred Jenkins confirmed the affertion, with respect to his nakedness, obsering, at the same time, that he had a skin as fair as alabaster.

Mrs. Bramble, turning from him, faid she had never seen such a filthy tatterdemalion, and bid him begone; observing, that he would fill the room sull of vermin—Her brother darted a significant glance at her, as she retired with Liddy into another ther apartment; and then asked the man if he was known to any person in Marlborough? --- When he answered, that the landlord of the inn had known him from his infancy; mine hoft was immediately called. and being interrogated on the subject, declared that the young fellow's name was Humphry Clinker. That he had been a love begotten babe, brought up in the work-house, and put out apprentice by the parish to a country black-fmith, who died before the boy's time was out : that he had for some time worked under their oftler, as a helper and extra postilion, till he was taken ill of the ague, which difabled him from getting his bread: that having fold or pawned every thing he had in the world for his cure and fubfiftance, he became fo miserable and shabby, that he disgraced the stable, and was dismissed; but that he never heard any thing to the prejudice of his character in other respects. "So that the fellow being fick and defti-" tute, (faid my uncle) you turned him out to die in " the fireet." So faying, he put a guineainto the hand of the poor fellow, who stood staring at him in silence, with his mouth wide open, till the landlord pushed him out of the room.

In the afternoon, as our aunt stept into the coach, she observed, with some marks of satisfaction, that the postilion, who rode next to her, was not a shabby wretch like the ragamuffin, who had drove them into Marlborough. Indeed, the difference was very conspicuous: this was a smart fellow, with a narrow-brimmed hat, with gold cording, a cut bob, a decent blue jacket, leather breeches, and a clean linen shirt, puffed above the waistband. When we arrived at the castle on Spinhill, where we lay, this new postilion was remarkably affiduous in bringing in the loofe parcels; and, at length, displayed the individual countenance of Humphry Clinker, who had metamorphofed himself in this manner, by relieving from pawn part of his own clothes, with the money he had received from Mr Bramble.

Howfoever pleafed the rest of the company were with fuch a favourable change in the appearance of this poor creature, it foured on the stomach of Mrs Tabby, who had not yet digested the affront of his naked skin ----- She toffed her nose in difdain, faying, she supposed her brother had taken him into favour, because he had insulted her with his obscenity; that a fool and his money were foon parted; but that if Matt intended to take the fellow with him to London, she would not nothing with his tongue, though his looks were fufficiently expressive; and next morning Clinker did not appear, fo that we proceeded without further alteration to Salt-hill, where we proposed to dine ____ There, the first person that came to the VOL. The fellow said, his honour had been so good to him, that he had not the heart to part with him; that he would follow him to the world's end, and serve him all the days of his life, without see or reward—

Mr Bramble did not know whether to chide or laugh at this declaration——He forefaw much contradiction on the fide of Tabby; and, on the other hand, he could not but be pleafed with the gratitude of Clinker, as well as with the simplicity of his character--- Suppose I was inclined to take "you into my fervice (said he) what are your quali-" fications? what are you good for?" This compliment and humiliation had fome effect upon Tabby; but the made no reply; and Clinker, taking filence for confent, gave his attendance at dinner. The fellow's natural aukwardness, and the flutter of his spirits, were productive of repeated blunders in the course of his attendance. --- At length, he spilt part of a custard upon her right shoulder; and, starting back, trod upon Chowder, who fet up a difmal howl --- Poor Humphry was fo disconcerted at this double miflake, that he dropt the china dish, which broke into a thousand pieces; then, falling down upon his knees, remained in that posture gaping, with a most ludicrous aspect of distress-Mrs Bramble flew to the dog, and fnatching him in her arms, presented him to her brother, faying, "This is all a concerted scheme against this unfortunate "animal, whose only crime is its regard for me --

Mr Bramble's eyes began to glisten, and his teeth to chatter. "It stated fairly, (said he, raising his voice) the question is, whether I have spirit to shake off an intolerable yoke, by one effort of resolution, or meannels enough to do an act of cruelty and injustice, to gratify the rantour of a capricious woman——Hark ye

I can't dispose " of the dog in this place; but if you'll allow him to " go in the coach to London, I give you my word, " he shall never trouble you again-"

Her brother, entirely difarmed by this mild reply, declared, the could ask him nothing in reason that he would refuse; adding, "I hope, fister, you have newer found me deficient in natural affection." Mrs Tabitha immediately rose, and throwing her arms about his neck, kissed him on the cheek; he returned her embrace with great emotion. Liddy sobbed, Win Jenkins cackled, Chowder capered, and Clinker skipped about, rubbing his hands for joy of this reconciliation.

Concord being thus restored, we finished our meal with comfort; and in the evening arrived at London, without having met with any other adventure. My aunt seems to be much mended by the hint the received from her brother. She has been graciously pleased to remove her displeasure from Clinker, who is now retained as sootman; and in a day or two will make his appearance in a new suit of livery; but as he is little acquainted with London, we have taken an occasional valet, whom I intend hereaster to hire as my own servant. We lodge in Golden-square, in the house of one Mrs Norton, a decent fort of a woman, who takes great pains to make us all easy. My uncle proposes to make a circuit of all the remarkable scenes of this metropolis, for the entertainment of his pupils; but as both you and I are already acquainted with most of those he will visit, and with some others he little dreams of, I shall only communicate what will be in some measure new to your observation. Remember me to your jestifical friends, and believe me ever,

Dear knight,

Yours always affectionately,

1. Melford.

London, May 24.

To Dr LEWIS.

DEAR DOCTOR,

O N D O N is literally new to me; new in its fitteets, houses, and even in its fituation; as the trishman said, "London is now gone out of town." What I lest open fields, producing hay and corn, I now find covered with streets, and squares, and palaces and churches. I am credibly informed, that in the space of eleven years, elven thousand new houses have been built in one quarter of Westminster, exclusive of what is daily added to other parts of this unwelldy metropolis. Pimlico and Knightsbridge are now almost joined to Chessea and Kensington; and if this infatuation continues for halt a century, I suppose the whole country of Middlesex will be covered with brick.

It must be allowed, indeed, for the credit of the present age, that London and Westminster are much better paved and lighted than they were formerly.

merly. The new streets are spacious, regular, and airy; and the houses generally convenient. The bridge at Blackfriars is a noble monument of tafte and public spirit I wonder how they stumbled upon a work of fuch magnificence and atility. But notwithstanding these improvements, the capital is become an ovegrown monster; which, like a dropfical head, will in time leave the body and extremeties without nourishment and support. The abfurdity will appear in its full force, when we confider, that one fixth part of the natives of this whole extensive kingdom, is crowded within the bills of mortality. What wonder that our villiages are depopulated, and our farms in want of day labourers: the abolition of small farms, is but one cause of the decrease of population. Indeed, the incredible increase of horses and black cattle, to answer the purposes of luxury, requires a prodigious quantity of hay and grafs, which are raifed and managed without much labour; but a number of hands will always be wanting for the different branches of agriculture, whether the farms be large or small ____ The tide of luxury has fwept all the inhabitants from the open country-The poorest 'squire, as well as the richest peer, must have his house in town, and make a figure with an extraordinary number of domestics_____ The plough boy, cow-herds, and lower hinds, are debauched and feduced by the appearance and difcourse of those coxcombs in livery, when they make their fummer excursions. They defert their dirt and drudgery, and fwarm up to London, in hopes of getting into fervice, where they can live luxuriously, and wear fine clothes, without being obliged to work; for idleness is natural to man-Great numbers of thefe, being difappointed in their expectation, become thieves and fharpers; and London being an immenfe wildernefs, in which there there is neither watch or ward of any fignification, nor any order or police, affords them lurking places as well as prey.

There are many causes that contribute to the daily increase of this enormous mass; but they may be all resolved into the grand source of luxury and torruption ---- About five and twenty years ago. very few even of the most opulent citizens of London kept any equipage, or even any fervants in liverv. Their tables produced nothing but plain boiled and roafted, with a bottle of port and a tankard of beer. At prefent, every trader in any degree of credit, every broker and attorney, maintains a couple of footmen, a coachman, and postilion. He has his town-house, and his country-house, his coach, and his post-chaife. His wife and daughters appear in the richest stuffs, bespangled with diamonds. They frequent the court, the opera, the theatre. and the mafguerade. They hold affembles at their own houses; they make sumptuous entertainments, and treat with the richest wines of Bourdeaux, Burgundy and Champagne. The fubite ial tradefman, who wont to pais his evenings at ne ale house for fourpence halfpenny, now fpends aree shillings at the tavern, while his wife keer card tables at home, the must likewise have fine clothes, her chaife, or pad, with country lodgings, and go three times a-week to public diversions. Every clerk, apprentice, and even waiter of a tavern or coffee-house. maintains a gelding by himfelf, or in partnership, and -assumes the air and apparel of a petit-maitre___The gayest places at public entertainment are filled with fashionable figures; which, upon enquiry, will be found to be journeymen taylors, ferving men, and abigails, difguifed like their betters.

In short, there is no distinction or subordination left ____ The different departments of life are jummed bled together-The hod carrier, the low mechanic. the tapfter, the publican, the shop-keeper, the pettfogger, the citizen, and courtier, all tread upon the kibes of one another; actuated by the decons of profigacy and licenciousness, they are seen every where rambling, riding, rolling, ruthing, jufling, mixing, bouncing, cracking, and crashing in one vile ferment of stupidity and corruption All is tumult and hurry; one would imagine they were impelled by fome diforder of the brain, that will not fuffer them to be at rest. The foot passengers run along as if they were purfued by bailiffs. The porters and chairmen trot with burdens. People, who keep their own equipages, drive through the streets at full speed. Even citizens, physicians, and apothecaries, glide in their chariots like lightning. The hackney-coachmen make their horses smoke, and the pavement shake under them; and I have actually feen a waggon pass through Piccadilly at the hand gallop. In a word, the whole nation feems to be running out of their wits.

The divertions of the times are not ill fuited to the genius of this incongruous monster, called the public. Give it noise, confusion, glare, and glitter, it has no idea of elegance and propriety-What are the amusement at Ranelagh? One half of the company are following one another's tails, in an entire circle; like fo many blind affes in an olive mill; where they can neither discourse, distinguish, nor be distinguished; while the other half are drinking hot water, under the denomination of tea, till nine or ten o'clock at night, to keep them awake for the rest of the evening. As for the orchestra, the vocal mutic especially, it is well for the performers, that they cannot be heard distinctly. Vauxhall is a composition of baubles, overcharged with paltry orgaments, ill conceived, and poorly executed; without any unity of defign, or propriety priety of disposition. It is an unnatural assembly of objects, fantastically illuminated in broken masses; seemingly contrived to dazzle the eyes, and divert the imagination of the vulgar—Here a wooden lion, there a stone statue; in one place a range of things like cosec-house boxes, covered a-top; in another, a parcel of ale-house benches; in a third, a pupper shew representation of a tin cascade; in a fourth, a gloomy cave of a circular form, like a sepulchral vault half lighted; in a fifth, a scanty slip of grass-plot, that would not afford pasture sufficient for an ass's colt. The walks, which Nature seems to have intended for solitude, shade, and silence, are filled with crowds of noisy people, sucking up the nocturnal rheums of an auguish climate: and through these gay scenes, a sew lamps glimmer like fo many farthing candles.

When I fee a number of well dreffed people, of both fexes, fitting on the covered benches, exposed to the eyes of the mob; and, which is worfe, to the cold, raw, night air, devouring fliced beef, and fwilling pork, and punch, and cyder, I can't help compassionating their temeritry, while I despise their want of taffe and decorum; but, when they course along those damp and gloomy walks, or crowd together upon the wet gravel, without any other cover than the cope of heaven, liftening to a long, which one half of them cannot possibly hear, how can I help supposing they are actually pofferfied by a spirit, more absurd and pernicious than any thing we meet with in the precincts of Bedlam? In all probability, the proprietors of this, and other public gardens of inferior note, in the skirts of this metopolis, are, in some shape connected with the faculty of physic, and the company of undertakers; for, considering that eagerness in the pursuit of what is called pleasure, which now predominates through every rank and denomination of life, I am persuaded that more gouts, rheumatisms, catarrhs, and consumptions are caught in thefe these nocturnal passimes, sub dio, than from all the risques and accidents to which a life of toil and dan-

Thefe, and other observations, which I have made in this excursion, will shorten my flay in London. and fend me back with a double relife to my folitude and mountains; but I shall return by a different rost from that which brought me to town. I have feen fome old friends, who confrantly refided in this virtuous metropolis, but they are so changed in manners and disposition, that we hardly knew or care for one another-In our journey from Bath, my fifter Tabby provoked me into a transport of passion; during which, like a man who had drank himself pot-valiant, I talked to her in such a stile of authority and resolution, as produced a most blessed effect. She and her dog have been remarkable quiet and orderly, ever fince this expostulation. How long this agreeable calm will last, Heaven above knows. I flatter myself the exercise of travelling has been of service to my health; a circumftance which encourages me to proceed in my projected expedition to the North. But I must, in the mean time, for the benefit and amusement of my pupils, explore the depths of this chaos this mishapen and monstrous capital, without head or tail, members or proportion.

Thomas was so insolent to my fister on the road, that I was obliged to turn him off abruptly, betwixt Chippenham and Malborough, where our coach was overturned. The fellow was always sullen and felfish; but if he should return to the country, you may give him the character for honesty and sobriety; and provided he behaves with proper respect to the samily, let him have a couple of guineas in the name of

Yours always,

London, May 29.

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Miss LÆTITIA WILLIS, at Gloucester.

My DEAR LETTY,

INEXPRESSIBLE was the pleasure I received from yours of the 25th, which was last night put into my hand by Mrs Brentwood, the milliner. from Gloucester ____ I rejoice to hear that my worthy governess is in good health, and, still more, that she no longer retains any displeasure towards her poor Liddy, I am forry you have loft the fociety of the agreeable Miss Vaughan; but, I hope, you won't have cause much longer to regret the departure of your school companions, as I make no doubt but your parents will, in a little time, bring you into the world, where you are fo well qualified to make a diftinguished figure. When that is the case, I flatter myfelf you and I shall meet again, and be happy together; and even improve the friendship which we contracted in our tender years. This at least I can promife-It shall not be for the want of my utmost endeavours, if our intimacy does not continue for life.

About five weeks ago we arrived in London, after an eafy journey from Bath; during which, however, we were overturned, and met with some other little incidents, which had like to have occasioned a misunderstanding betwixt my uncle and aunt; but now, thank God, they are happily reconciled; we live in harmony together, and every day make parties to see the wonders of this vast metropolis, which, however, I cannot pretend to describe; for I have not as yet seen one hundredth part of its curiosities, and I am quite in a maze of admiration.

The cities of London and Westminster are spread out into an incredible extent. The streets, squares, rows, lanes, and alleys, are innumerable. Palaces, public buildings, and churches, rise in every quarter; and among these last, St Paul's appears with the most associations pre-eminence. They say it is not so large as St Peter's at Rome; but, for my own part, I can have no idea of any earthly temple more grand and magnificient.

But even these superb objects are not to striking as the crouds of people that fwarm in the streets. 1 at first imagined, that some great affembly was just dismissed, and wanted to stand aside till the multitude should pass; but this human tide continues to flow, without interruption or abatement, from morn till night. Then there is fuch an infinity of gay equipages, coaches, and chariots, chaifes, and other carriages, continually rolling and shifting before your eyes, that one's head grows giddy, looking at them; and the imagination is quite confounded with splendor and variety. Nor is the prospect by water less grand and aftonishing than that by land: you fee three stupendous bridges, joining the opposite banks of a broad, deep, and rapid river; fo vast, so stately, so elegant, that they feem to be the work of the giants: betwixt them, the whole surface of the Thames is covered with small vessels, barges, boats, and wherries, pasfing to and fro; and below the three bridges, fuch a prodigious forest of masts, for miles together, that you would think all the ships in the universe were here affembled. All that you read of wealth and grandeur, in the Arabian Night's Entertainment, and the Persian Tales, concerning Bagdad, Diarbekir, Damascus, Ispahan, and Samarkand, is here realized.

Ranelagh looks like the inchanted palace of a genii, adorned with the most exquisite perform-Vol. 1. M ances ances of painting, carving, and gilding, enlightened with a thousand golden lamps, that emulate the noon-day fun; crowded with the great, the rich, the gay, the happy, and the fair; glittering with cloth of gold and filver, lace, embroidery, and precious stones. While these exulting sons and daughters of felicity tread this round of pleafure, or regale in different parties, and separate lodges, with fine imperial tea and other delicious refreshments. ther ears are entertained with the most ravishing delights of music, both instrumental and vocal. There I heard the famous Tenducci, a thing from Italy-It looks for all the world like a man, though they fay it is not. The voice to be fure, is neither man's nor woman's; but it is more melodious than either; and it warbled fo divinely, that while I liftened, I really thought myself in paradife.

At nine o'clock, in a charming moon light evening, we embarked at Ranelagh for Vauxhall, in a wherry, fo light and flender, that we looked like fo many fairies failing in a nut-shell. My uncle, being apprehensive of catching cold upon the water, went round in the coach, and my aunt would have accompanied him but he would not fuffer me to go by water if she went by land; and therefore she favoured us with her company, as she perceived I had a curiofity to make this agreeable voyage-After all, the veffel was fufficiently loaded; for, besides the waterman, there was my brother Jery, and a friend of his, one Mr Barton, a country gentleman of a good fortune, who had dined at our house-The pleasure of this little excursion was, however, damped, by my being fadly frighted at our landing; where there was a terrible confusion of wherries, and a crowd of people bawling, and iwearing, and quarrelling; nay a parcel of ugly-looking fellows came running into the

the water, and laid hold on our boat with great violence, to pull it ashore; nor would they quit their hold till my brother ftruck one of them over the head with his cane. But this flutter was fully recompenfed by the pleasures of Vauxhall; which I no fooner entered, than I was dazzled and confounded with the variety of beauties that rushed all at once upon my eye. Image to yourself, my dear Letty, a spacious garden, part laid out in delightful walks, bounded with hedges and trees, and paved with gravel; part exhibiting a wonderful affemblage of the most picturesque and striking objects, pavilion, lodges, groves, grottoes, lawns, temples, and cafcades; porticoes, colonades, and rotundoes; adorned with pillars, statues, and painting : the whole illuminated with an infinite number of lamps, difpoled in different figures of funs, ftars, and conftellations; the place crowded with the gayest company, ranging through those blissful shades, or supping in different lodges, on cold collations, enlivened with mirth, freedom and good humour, and animated by an excellent band of music. Among the vocal performers I had the happiness to hear the celebrated Mrs ____, whose voice was so loud and so shrill, that it made my head ake through excess of plea-

In about half an hour after we arrived we were joined by my uncle, who did not feem to relish the place. People of experience and infirmity, my dear Letty, fee with very different eyes from those that such as you and I make use of——Our evening's entertainment was interrupted by an unlucky accident. In one of the remotest walks we were surprised with a sudden shower, that set the whole company a running, and drove us in heaps, one upon another, into the rotunda; where my uncle, sinding himself wet, began to be very peevish and M 2 urgent urgent to be gone. My brother went to look for the coach, and found it with much difficulty; but as it could not hold us all, Mr Barton staid behind. It was some time before the carriage could be brought up to the gate, in the confusion, notwithstanding the utmost endeavours of our new sootman, Humphry Clinker, who lost his scratch periwig, and got a broken head in the scusse. The moment we were seated, my aunt pulled off my uncle's shoes and carefully wrapped his poor seet in her capuchin; then she gave him a monthful of cordial, which she always keeps in her pocket, and his clothes were shifted as soon as we arrived at lodgings; so that, blessed be God, he escaped a severe cold, of which he was in great terror.

As for Mr Barton, I must tell you in considence, he was a little particular; but, perhaps, I mistake his complaisance; and I wish I may, for his sake ————You know the condition of my poor heart; which, in spite of hard usage————And I ought not to complain: nor will I, till farther information.

Besides Ranelagh and Vauxhall, I have been at Mrs Cornely's affembly, which, for the rooms, the company, the dreffes, and decorations, Jurpaffes all description; but as I have no great turn for cardplaying, I have not yet entered thoroughly into the fpirit of the place : Indeed I am ftill fuch a countryhoyden, that I could hardly find patience to be put In a condition to appear, yet I was not above fix hours under the hands of the hair-dreffer, who stuffed my head with as much black wool as would have made a quilted petticoat; and, after all, it was the finallest head in the assembly, except my aunt's ___She, to be fure, was fo particular with her rumpt gown and petticoat, her icanty curls, her lappethead, deep triple ruffl:s, and high ftays, that every body looked at her with furprife; fome whilpered, and and some tittered; and Lady Griskin, by whom we were introduced, flatly told her, she was twenty good years behind the fashion.

Lady Griskin is a person of sashion, to whom we have the honour to be related. She keeps a finall rout at her own house, never exceeding ten. or a dozen card-tables, but thefe are frequented by the best company in town --- She has been so obliging as to introduce my aunt and me to some of her particular friends of quality, who treat us with the most familiar good humour: we have once dined with her, and the takes the trouble to direct us in all our motions. I am fo happy as to have gained her good will to fuch a degree, that the fometimes adjusts my cap with her own hands; and she has given me a kind invitation to flay with her all the winter. This, however, has been cruelly declined by my uncle, who feems to be (I know not how). prejudiced against the good lady; for, whenever my aunt happens to speak in her commendation, I obferve that he makes wry faces; though he fays nothing-Perhaps, indeed, thefe grimaces may be the effect of pain arising from the gout and rheuma-, tism, with which he is fadly diffrested _____To me, however, he is always good-natured and generous, even beyond my wish. Since we came hither, he has made me a present of a suit of clothes, with trimmings and laces, which coft more money than I shall mention; and Jery, at his defire, has given me my mother's diamond drops, which are ordered to be fet a-new; fo that it won't be his fault if I do not glitter among the flars of the fourth or fifth magnitude. I wish my weak head may not grow giddy in the m'dft of all this gallantry and diffipation; though, as yet, I can fafely declare, I could gladly give up all these tumultuous pleasures, for country folitude, and a happy retreat with those we M 3 love;

LYDIA MELFORD.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR PHILLIPS.

SEND you this letter, franked by our old friend Barton; who is as much altered as it was possible for a man of his kidney to be-Instead of the careless, indolent floven we knew at Oxford, I found him a busy talkative politician: a petit maitre in his drefs, and a ceremonious courtier in his manners. He has not gall enough in his conflitution to be inflamed with the rancour of party, fo as to deal in fcurrilous invectives; but, fince he obtained a place, he is become a warm partizan of the ministry, and sees every thing through such an exaggerating medium, as to me, who am happily of no party, is altogether incomprehensible-Without all doubt, the fumes of faction not only disturb the faculty of reason, but also pervert the organs of fenfe; and I would lay an hundred guineas to ten, that if Barton on one fide, and the most conscientious patriot in the opposition on the other, were to draw, upon honour, the picture of the k- or m-, you and I, who are fill uninfected, and unbiaffed, would find both painters equally diffant from the truth. One thing, however, must be allowed for the honour of Barton, he never breaks out into illiberal abuse, far less endeavours, by infamous calumnies, to blast the moral character of any individual, on the other fide.

Ever fince we came hither, he has been remarkably ably affiduous in his attention to our family; an attention, which, in a man of his indolence and avocations, I should have thought altogether odd, and even unnatural, had I not perceived that my fifter Liddy has made fome impression upon his heart. I can't fay that I have any objection to his trying his fortune in this pursuit; if an opulent estate. and a great flock of good nature are fufficient qualifications in a husband, to render the marriage-state happy for life, the may be happy with Barton: but, I imagine, there is fomething elfe required to engage and fecure the affection of a woman, of fense and delicacy: fomething which Nature has denied our friend Liddy feems to be of the same opinion. When he addresses himself to her in difcourfe, the feems to liften with reluctance, and industriously avoids all particular communication; but in proportion to her coynefs, our aunt is coming. Mrs Tabitha goes more than half way to meet his advances; the mistakes, or affects to mistake, the meaning of his courtefy which is rather formal and fulfome; the returns his compliments with hyperbolical interest, she persecutes him with her civilities at table, the appeals to him for ever in conversation, the fighs, and flirts, and ogles, and by her hideous affectation and impertinence, drives the poor courtier to the very extremity of his complaifance: in short, she feems to have undertaken the fiege of Barton's heart, and carries on her approaches in such a desperate manner, that I don't know whether he will not be obliged to capitulate. In the mean time, his averfion to this inamorata struggling with his acquired affability, and his natural fear of giving offence, throws him into a kind of diffress which is extremely ridiculous.

Two days ago, he perfuaded my uncle and me to accompany him to St James's, where he undertook to make us acquainted with the perfons of all the great men in the kingdom; and, indeed, there was a great affemblage of diftinguished characters, for it was a high festival at court. Our conductor performed his promise with great punctuality. He pointed out almost every individual of both fexes, and generally introduced them to our notice, with a flourish of panegyric - Seeing the King approach, "There comes (faid he) the most amiable " lovereign that ever swayed the sceptre of England; " the deliciæ bumani generis; Augustus, in patroni-" zing merit; Titus Vespasian in generosity; Trajan " in beneficence, and Marcus Aurelius, in philofo-" A very honest, kind-hearted gentle-" man (added my uncle); he's too good for the times. " A King of England should have a spice of the de-" vil in his composition." Barton then turning to the Duke of C-, proceeded You know the " Duke, that illustrious hero, who trode rebellion " under his feet, and secured us in possession of every "thing we ought to hold dear, as Englishmen and "Christians. Mark what an eye, how penetrating, " yet pacific! what dignity in his mien! what hu-" manity in his afpect - Even malice must own, that " he is one of the greatest officers in Christendom. " I think he be (faid Mr Bramble); but who are "these young gentlemen that stand beside him!" "Those! (cried our friend) those are his royal ne-" phews! the princes of the blood. Sweet young " princes! the facred pledges of the Protestant line; " fo spirited, so sensible, so princely-" "Yes; veer very fenfible! very spirited! (taid my uncle inter-" rupting him) but fee the queen! ha! there's the " queen_There's the queen! let me fee___Let me " fee __ Where are my glaff-s! ha! there's mean-" ing in that eye -- There's fentiment -- There's expression. Well, Mr Barton, what a figure do

"you call next? The next perfon he pointed out was the favourite years; who stood solitary by one of the windows-" Behold von northern frar (fays "he) forn of his beams -- " " What! the Caledo-" nian luminary, that lately blazed fo bright in our "hemisphere! methinks, at prefent, it glinmers "through a fog; like Saturn without his ring, bleak "and dim, and diftant --- Ha, there's the other " great phenomenon, the grand pensionary, that wea-"ther-cock of partriotism that veers about in every " point of the political compass, and still feels the wind " of popularity in his tail. He too, like a portentuous "comet, has rifen again above the court horizon; but "how long he will continue to afcend, it is not eafy "to foretel, confidering his great eccentricity-Who " are those two satellities that attend his motions?" When Barton told him their names, "To their cha-"racters (faid Mr Bramble) I am no stranger. One " of them, without a drop of red blood in his veins, "has a cold, intoxicating vapour in his head; and "rancour enough in his heart to innoculate and af-"fect a whole nation. The other is (I hear) in-" tended for a share in the ad-n, and the pen-" fionary vouches for his being duly qualified -"The only instance I ever heard of his fagueity, " was his deferting his former patron, when he "found him declining in power, and in dif-"grace with the people. Without principle, talent, "or intelligence, he is ungracious as a hog, gree-"dy as a vulture, and thievish as a jack-daw; but, it "must be owned, he is no hypocrite. He pretends "to no virtue, and takes no pains to difguife his "character___His ministry will be attended with "one advantage, no man will be disappointed by "his breach of promise, as no mortal ever trusted "to his word. He was generally "laughed at as an ape in politics, whose office "and influence ferved only to render his folly the "more notorious; and the opposition curfed him, "as the indefatigable drudge of a first-mover, "who was just stiled and stigmatized as the fa-"ther of corruption: but this ridiculous ape,

" this venal drudge, no fooner loft the places he " was fo ill qualified to fill, and unfurled the ban-" ners of faction, than he was metamorphofed into " a pattern of public virtue; the very people who " reviled him before, now extolled him to the skies, " as a wife, experienced statesman, chief pillar of the Protestant succession, and corner-stone of " English liberty. I should be glad to know how " Mr Barton reconciles thefe contradictions, with-" out obliging us to refign all title to the privilege e of common fense." " My dear Sir, (answered "Barton) I don't pretend to justify the extravaga-. tions of the multitude; who I suppose were as " wild in their former cenfure, as in their prefent " praise: but I shall be very glad to attend you on "Thursday next to his Grace's levee; where, I am " afraid, we shall not be crowded with company; " for, you know, there's a wide difference between " his prefent office of prefident of the council, and " his former post of first lord commissioner of the " treafury."

This communicative friend having announced all the remarkable characters of both fexes, that appeared at court, we resolved to adjourn, and retired. At the foot of the stair-case, there was a crowd of lacqueys and chairmen, and in the midst of them stood Humphry Clinker, exalted upon a stool, with his hat in one hand, and a paper in the other, in the act of holding forth to the people—Before we could enquire into the meaning of this exhibition, he perceived his master, thrust the paper into his pocket, descended from his elevation, boked through the crowd,

My uncle faid nothing till we were feated, when, after having looked at me earnefly for some time, he burst out a-laughing and asked me if I knew upon what subject Clinker was holding forth to the mob?

"I know not whether you " rank in that class the audience you was haranguing " in the court at St James's, but I should be glad to "know what kind of powders you was diffributing! " and whether you had a good fale_" " Sale, Sir; " (cried Clinker) I hope I shall never be base enough to fell for gold and filver, what freely comes of "God's grace. "Concerning profane swearing, an please your ho-" nour; fo horrid and shocking, that it made my hair " stand on end." "But, Clinker, (fays he) if you "fhould have eloquence enough to persuade the "vulgar, to refign those troops and figures of rhe-"toric, there will be little or nothing left to di-"flinguish their conversation from that of their VOL. I. N " betters."

"betters. "But then your honour knows, their conversation will be void of offence; and, at the day of judgment, there will be no distinction of Humphry going down stairs to fetch up a bottle of wine, my uncle congratulated his fifter upon having fuch a reformer in the family: when Mrs Tabitha declared, he was a fober civilized fellow; very respectful, and very industrious; and, she believed, a good Christian into the bargain. One would think Clinker must really have some very extraordinary talent, to ingratiate himfelf in this manner with a virago of her character, so fortified against him with prejudice and refentment; but the truth is, fince the adventure of Salt-hill, Mrs Tabby feems to be entirely changed. She has left off scolding the fervants, an exercife which was grown habitual, and even feemed necessary to her constitution; and is become so indifferent to Chowder, as to part with him in a prefent to Lady Grifkin, who propofes to bring the breed of him into fashion. Her Ladyship is the widow of Sir Timothy Grifkin, a diffant relation of our family. She enjoys a jointure of five hundred pounds a-year, and makes shift to spend three times that sum. Her character before marriage was a little equivocal; but at prefent the lives in the bon ton, keeps card-tables, gives private suppers to select friends, and is visited by persons of the first fashion ___ She has been re-· markably civil to us all, and cultivates my uncle with the most particular regard; but the more she stroaks him, the more his briftles feem to rife-To her compliments he makes very laconic and dry returns-T'other day, the fent us a pottle of fine strawberries, which he did not receive without figns of difgust, muttering from the Æneid, timeo Danaos et Dona ferentes. J. MELFORD.

" persons."

To Dr LEWIS.

YES, Doctor, I have feen the British Museum; which is a noble collection, and even stupendous, if we consider it was made by a private man, a phyfician, who was obliged to make his own fortune at the same time: but great as the collection is, it would appear more striking it it was arranged in one spacious faloon, instead of being divided into different apartments, which it does not entirely fill-I could with the feries of medals was connected, and the whole of the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms compleated, by adding to each, at the public expence, those articles that are wanting. It would likewise be a great improvement, with respect to the library, if the deficiencies were made up, by purchasing all the books of character that are not to be found already in the collection-They might be classed in centuries, according to the dates of their publication, and catalogues printed of them and the manuscripts, for the information of those that want to consuit, or compile from fuch authorities. I could also with, for the honour of the nation, that there was a complete apparatus for a courfe of mathematics, me-N 2

chanics, and experimental philosophy; and a good falary settled upon an able professor, who should give regular lectures on these subjects.

But this is all idle speculation, which will never be reduced to practice—Confidering the temper of the times, it is a wonder to fee any institution whatfoever established, for the benefit of the public. The fpirit of party is rifen to a kind of phrenzy, unknown to former ages, or rather degenerated to a total extinction of honesty and candour-You know I have observed, for some time, that the public papers are become the infamous vehicles of the most cruel and perfidious defamation: every rancorous knave every desperate incendiary, that can afford to spend half a crown or three shillings, may skulk behind the press of a news monger, and have a flab at the first character in the kingdom, without running the left hazard of detection, or punishment.

I have made acquaintance with a Mr Barton, whom Jery knew at Oxford: 2 good fort of a man, though most ridiculously warped in his political principles; but his partiality is the less offensive, as it never appears in the stile of scurrility and abuse. He is a member of parliament, and a retainer to the court: and his whole converfation turns upon the virtues and perfections of the ministers, who are his patrons. T'other day, when he was bedaubing one of those worthies, with the most fulsome praise, I told him I had feen the same nobleman characterised very differently, in one of the daily papers; indeed fo ftigmatized, that if one half of what was faid of him was true, he must be not only unfit to rule, but even unfit to live; that those impeachments had been repealed again and again, with the addition of fresh matter; and that as he had taken no steps towards his own vindication, I began to think there was some foundation foundation for the charge. " And pray, Sir. (faid " Mr Barton) what steps would you have him take! "____Suppose he should profecute the pub-"lifher, who fcreens the anonymous accuser, and "bring him to the pillory for a libel, that is fo " far from being counted a punishment, in terro-" rem, that it will probably make his fortune. The " multitude immediately take him under their pro-"tection, as a martyr to the cause of defamation, "which they have always espouled ____ They pay " his fine, they contribute to the increase of his stock, " his shop is crowded with customers, and the fale " of his paper rifes in proportion to the fcandal it " contains. All this time the profecutor is inveighed " against as a tyrant and oppressor, for having chosen " to proceed by the way of information, which is " deemed a grievance; but if he lays an action for " damages; he must prove the damage; and I leave "you to judge, whether a gentleman's charaster may " not be brought into contempt, and all the views in "life blafted with calumny, without his being able " to specify the particulars of the damage he has fu-" stained.

"The spirit of defamation is a kind of heresy, " that thrives under perfecution. The liberty of the ' press is a term of great efficacy; and, like that is of the Protestant religion, has often served the pur-" poses of fedition ------ A minister, there-" fore, must arm himself with patience, and bear " those attacks without repining. "Whatever mischief they may do in other respects "they certainly contribute, in one particular, to "the advantage of government; for those defima. "tory articles have multiplied papers in fuch a " manner, and 'augmented their fale to fuch a de-" gree, that the duty upon stamps and advertisements " have made a very confiderable addition to the re-Certain it is, a gentleman's " renue."___ N.3

honour is a very delicate subject to be handled by a jury, composed of men, who cannot be supposed remarkable either for fentiment or impartiality-In fuch a case, indeed, the defendent is tried, not only by his peers, but also by his party, and I really think, that of all patriots, he is the most refolute, who exposes himself to such detraction, for the sake of his country____If, from the ignorance or partiality of juries, a gentleman can have no redress from law, for being defamed in a pamphlet or newfpaper, I know but one other method of proceeding against the publisher, which is attended with some rifque, but has been practifed fuccefsfully, more than once, in my remembrance A regiment of horse was reprefented, in one of the news-papers, as having misbehaved at Dettingen; a captain of that regiment broke the publisher's bones, telling him, at the fame time, if he went to law, he should certainly have the like falutation from every officer of the corps. Governor-tock the fame fatisfaction on the ribs of an author, who traduced him by name in a periodical paper, ___ I know a low fellow of the fame class, who, being turned out of Venice for his impudence and fcurrility, retired to Lugano, a town of the Grifons, (a free people, God wot) where he found a printing press, from whence he squirted his filth at some respectable characters in the republic, which he had been obliged to abandon. Some of thefe, finding him cut of the reach of legal chastife. ment, employed certain useful instruments, such as may be found in all countries, to give him the baffinado; which, being repeated more than once, effectually stopt the current of his abuse.

As for the liberty of the press, like every other privilege, it must be restrained within certain bounds; for if it is carried to a breach of law, religion, and charity, it becomes one of the greatest evils evils that ever annoyed the community. If the lowest russian may stab your good name with impunity in England, will you be so uncandid as to exclaim against Italy for the practice of common assistantion? To what purpose is our property secured, if our moral character is lest desenceless?——People thus baited, grow desperate; and the despair of being able to preserve one's character, untainted by such vermin, produces a total neglect of same; so that one of the chief incitements to the practice of virtue is effectually destroyed.

Mr Barton's last consideration, respecting the ftamp-duty, is equally wife and laudable with another maxim which has been long adopted, by our financiers, namely, to connive at drunkenness, riot, and diffipation, because they enhance the receipt of the excise; not reflecting, that in providing this temporary convenience, they are destroying the morals, health, and industry of the people____Notwithstanding my contempt for those who flatter a minifter, I think there is fomething still more despicable in flattering a mob When I fee a man of birth, education, and fortune, put himself on a level with the dregs of the people, mingle with low mechanics, feed with them at the same board, and drink with them in the same cup, flatter their prejudices, harangue in praise of their virtues, expose themselves to the belching of their beer, the fumes of their tobacco, the groffness of their familiarity, and the impertinence of their conversation, I cannot help defpiling him, as a man guilty of the vilest profitution, in order to effect a purpose equally selfish and illiberal.

I should renounce politics the more willingly, if I could find other topics of conversation, discussed with more modesty and candour; but the demon dæmon of party feems to have usurped every department of life. Even the world of literature and taffe is divided into the most virulent factions, which revile, decry, and traduce the works of one another. Yesterday, I went to return an afternoon's visit to a gentleman of my acquaintance, at whose house I found one of the authors of the present age, who has written with some success-As I had read one or two of his performances, which gave me pleasure, I was glad of this opportunity to know his person; but his discourse and deportment destroyed all the impressions which his writings had made in his favour. He took upon him to decide dogmatically upon every subject, without deigning to show the least cause for his differing from the general opinions of mankind, as if it had been our duty to acquiesce in the ipfe dixit of this new Pythagoras. He rejudged the characters of all the principal authors, who had died within a century of the prefent time; and, in this revision, paid no fort of regard to the reputation they had acquired ____ Milton was harth and profaic; Dryden, languid and verbofe; Butler and Swift, without humour: Congreve, without wit; and Pope destitute of any fort of poetical merit ---- As for his cotemporaries, he could not bear to hear one of them mentioned with any degree of applause ---- They were all dunces, pedants, plagiaries, quacks, and -impostors; and you could not name a fingle performance, but what was tame, stupid, and insipid. It must be owned, that this writer had nothing to charge his conscience with on the fide of flattery; for, I understand, he was never known to praise one line that was written, even by those with whom he lived on terms of good fellowship. This arrogance and prefumption, in depreciating authors, for whose reputation the company may be interested, is such an insult upon the

the understanding, as I could not bear without wincing.

I defired to know his reasons for decrying some works, which had afforded me uncommon pleasure; and, as demonstration did not feem to be his talent, I differted from his opinion with great freedom. Having been spoiled by the deference and humility of his hearers, he did not bear contradiction with temper; and the dispute might have grown warm, had it not been interrupted by the entrance of a rival bard, at whose appearance he always quits the place-They are of different cables, and has been at open war thefe twenty years - If the other was dogmatical, this genius was declamatory: he did not discourse, but harangue; and his orations were equally tedious and turgid. He too pronounced ex cathedra upon the characters of his cotemporaries; and though he fcruples not to deal out praife, even lavishly, to the lowest reptile in Grub-street, who will either flatter him in private, or mount the public roftrum as his panegyrift, he damns all the other writers of the age, with the utmost insolence and rancour-Cne is a blunderbuss, as being a native of Ireland; another a halfflarved loufe of literature, from the banks of the Tweed; a third, an ass, because he enjoys a pension from the government; a fourth, the very angel of dulnefs, because he succeeded in a species of writing in which this Ariftarchus had failed; a fifth, who prefumed to make strictures upon one of his performances, he holds as a bug in criticism, whose stench is more offensive than his fting-----In short, except himself and his myrmidons, there is not a man of genius or learning in the three kingdoms. As for the success of those, who have written without the pale of this confederacy, he imputes it entirely to want of tafte in the public; not confidering that to the approbation of that very tafteless tasteless public, he himself owes all the consequence he has in life.

Those originals are not fit for conversation. If they would maintain the advantage they have gained by their writing, they should never appear but upon paper-For my part, I am shocked to find a man have fublime ideas in his head, and nothing but illiberal fentiments in his heart-The human foul will be generally found most defective in the article of candour -I am inclined to think, no mind was ever wholly exempt from envy; which, perhaps may have been implanted, as an instinct effential to our nature. I am afraid we fometimes palliate this vice, under the fpecious name of emulation. I have known a person remarkably generous, humane, moderate, and apparently felf-denying, who could not hear even a friend commended, without betraying marks of uneafiness; as if that commendation had implied an odious comparison to his prejudice, and every wreath of praise added to the others character, was a garland plucked from his This is a malignant species of jealouly, own temples. of which I ftand acquitted in my own conscience-Whether it is a vice or an infirmity, I leave you to inquire.

There is another point, which I would much rather see determined; whether the world was always as contemptible, as it appears to me at present?——
If the morals of mankind have not contracted an extraordinary degree of depravity, within these thirty years, then must I be insected with the common vice of old men, difficilis, querulus, laudator temporis acti; or, which is more probable, the impetuous pursuits and avocations of youth have formerly hindered me from observing those rotten parts of human nature, which now appears so offensively to my observation.

We have been at court, and 'change, and every where; and every where we find food for spleen, and subject for ridicule---My new servant, Humphry Clinker, turns out a great original; and Tabby is a changed creature—She has parted with Chowder; and does nothing but smile, like Malvolio in the play --I'll be hanged if she is not acting a part which is not natural to her disposition, for some purpose which I have not yet discovered.

With respect to the characters of mankind, my curiosity is quite satisfied: I have done with the science of men, and must now endeavour to amuse mysels with the novelty of things. I am, at present, by a violent effort of the mind, forced from my natural bias; but this power, ceasing to act, I shall return to my solitude with redoubled velocity. Every thing I see, and hear, and feel, in this great reservoir of solly, knavery, and sophistication, contributes to inhance the value of a country life, in the sentiments of Yours always.

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Mrs MARY JONES, at Brambleton-hall.

DEAR MARY JONES,

L'squire Barton to frank me a kiver, I would not neglect to let you know how it is with me, and the rest of the family.

I could not rite by John Thomas, for because he went away in a huff, at a minute's warning. He and Chowder could not agree, and so they fitt upon the road, and Chowder bit his thumb, and he swore he would do him a mischief, and he spoke saucy to mistress, whereby the squire turned him off in gudgeon; and by God's providence we picked up upon upon another footman, called Umphry Klinker; a good fole as ever broke bread; which shews, that a scalded cat may prove a good mouser, and a hound be stanch, thos he has got narro hare on his buttocks, but the proudest nose may be bro't to the grine-stone by sickness and misfortunes.

O Molly! what shall I say of London? All the towns that ever I beheld in my born-days, are no more than Welsh barrows and crumlecks to this wonderful sitty! Even Bath itself is but a sillitch in the naam of God—One would think there's no end of the streets, but the land's end. Then there's such a power of people, going hurry skurry! Such a racket of coxes! Such a noise, and hali balloo? So many strange sites to be seen! O gracious! my poor Welsh brain has been spinning like a top ever since I came hither! And I have seen the Park, and the Paleass of St Gimses, and the king's and the queen's magisterial pursing, and the sweet young princes, and the hillysents, and pye-bald ass, and all the rest of the royal family.

Last week I went with Mistress to the Tower, to fee the crowns and wild beaftis; and there was a monstracious lion, with teeth half a quarter long; and a gentleman bid me not go near him, if I wasn't a maid; being as how he would roar, and tear, and play the dickens-Now I had no mind to go near him; for I cannot abide fuch dangerous honeymils, not Ibut mistress would go; and the beast kept such a roaring and bouncing, that I tho't he would have broke his cage, and devoured us all; and the gentleman tittered forfooth; but I'll go to death upon it, I will, that my lady is as good a firchin, as the child unborn; and, therefore, either the gentleman told a fib. or the lion oft to be fet in the flocks for bearing false witness against his neighbour; for the commandment fayeth, Thou Shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

I was afterwards of a party at Sadlers' Wells, where I faw fuch tumbling and dancing upon ropes and wires, that I was frightened and ready to go into a fit -I thought it was all enchantment ; and, believing myfelf bewitched, began for to cry-You knows as how the witches in Wales fly upon broomflicks, but here was flying without any broomflicks, or thing in the varfal world, and firing of pistols in the air, and blowing of trumpets, and fwinging, and rolling of wheel-barrows upon a wire, (God blifs us!) no thicker than a fewing-thread; that, to be fure, they must deal with the devil-A fine gentleman, with a pig's tail, and a golden ford by his fide, came to comfit me, and offered to treat me with a pint of wind; but I would not fray; and fo, in going through the dark paffage, he began to shew his cloven futt, and went for to be rude; my fellow farvant Umphry Klinker, bid him be fivil, and he gave the young man a dowfe in the chops; but, I fackins, Mr Klinker wa'n't long in his debt - with a good oaken fapling he dusted his doublet, for all his golden cheesetoafter; and, fipping me under his arm, carried me huom, I nose not how, being I was in such a slustration-But, thank God! I'm now vaned from all fuch vanities; for what are thole rarities and vageries to the glory that shall be revealed hereafter! O Molly! let not your poor heart be puffed up with yanity.

I had almost forgot to tell you, that I have had my hair cut and pippered, and finged, and bolstered and buckled, in the newest fashion, by a French freezer—Parley vow Francey—Vee madmans. Ill. I now carries my head higher than arrow prival gentlewoman of Vales. Last night, coming hundred from the meeting, I was taken by a lamp-light san imment poulterer's daughter, a great beautiful an imment poulterer's daughter, a great beautiful Bur as I was saying, this is all vanity andversion. Vol. I.

tion of spirit—The pleasures of London are not better than sower whey and stale cyder, when compared to the joys of the new Gerusalem.

Dear Mary Jones! An' please God when I return, I'll bring you a new cap, with a turkey-shell coom, and a pye-house fermon, that was preached in the tabernacle; and I pray of all love, you will mind your vriting and your spelling; for, craving your pardon, Molly, it made me fuet to diffeyffer your last fcrabble, which was delivered by the hind at Bath-O, voman! voman! if thou had'ft, but the least confumption of what pleafure we scullers have, when we can cunfter the crabbidft buck off hand, and spell the ethnitch vords without looking at the primmer. for Mr Klinker, he is qualified to be clerk to a parish -But I'll fay no more-Remember me to Saulpoor fole! it goes to my heart to think fhe don't yet know her letters - But all in God's good time-It shall go hard, but I will bring her the ABC in gingerbread; and that, you nose, will be learning to her tafte.

Mistress says, we are going a long gurney to the North; but go where we will, I shall ever be,

Dear Mary Jones,

Yours with true infection,

WIN. JENKINS.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR WAT,

I MENTIONED in my last, my uncle's design of going to the Duke of N—'s levee; which design has been executed accordingly. His grace has been so long accustomed to this kind of homage, that tho' the the place he now fills does not imply the tenth part of the influence, which he exerted in his former office, he has given his friends to understand, that they cannot oblige him in any thing more, than in contributing to support the shadow of that power which he no longer retains in substance; and therefore he has still public days, on which they appear at his levee.

My uncle and I went thither with Mr Barton, who, being one of the Duke's adherents, undertook to be our introducer. The room was pretty well filled with people, in a great variety of drefs; but there was no more than one gown and caffock, tho' I was told his grace had, while he was minister, preferred almost every individual that now filled the bench of bishops in the house of lords; but, in all probability, the gratitude of the clergy is like their charity, which thuns the light-Mr Barton was immediately accosted by a person, well stricken in years, tall, and raw-boned, with a hook nofe, and an arch leer, that indicated, at least, as much cunning as fagacity. Our conductor faluted him by the name of Captain C-, and afterwards informed us he was a man of shrewd parts, whom the government occasionally employed in fecret fervices -But I have had the history of him more at large, from another quarter-He had been, many years ago, concerned in fraudulent practices, as a merchant, in France; and being convicted of fome of them, was fent to the gallies, from whence he was delivered by the interest of the late Duke of Ormond, to whom he had recommended himself in a letter, as his name-fake and relation—He was, in the fequel, employed by our ministry as a spy; and in the war of 1740, traversed all Spain, as well as France, in the difguite of a capuchin, at the extreme hazard of his life, in as much as the court of Madrid had actually got fcent of him, and given orders to apprehend him at St Sebastian's, from from whence he had fortunately retired but a few hours before the order arrived. This and other hair breadth 'scapes he pleaded fo effectually as a merit with the English ministry, that they allowed him a comfortable pension, which he now enjoys in his old age-He has ftill access to all the ministers, and is faid to be consulted by them on many subjects as a man of uncommon understanding and great experience-He is, in fact, a fellow of some parts, and invincible affurance; and, in his difcourse, he affumes such an air of felf-fufficiency, as may very well impose upon fome of the shallow politicians, who now labour at the helm of administration. But, if he is not belied. this is not the only imposture of which he is guilty-They fay, he is at bottom not only a Roman Catholic, but really a priest: and while he pretends to disclose to our state-pilots all the springs that move the cabinet of. Verfailles, he is actually picking up intelligence for the service of the French minister-Be that as it may, Captain C____entered into conversation with us in the most familiar manner, and ireared the Duke's character without any ceremony ... "This " wife-act (seid he) is still a-bed; and, I think, the "best thing he can do, is to sleep on till Christmas; of for, when he gets up, he does nothing but expose " his own folly. Since Granville was turned out, "there has been no minister in this nation worth " the meal that whitened his periwig--- They are fo "ignorant, they fcarce know a crab from a cauli-"flower: and then they are fuch dunces, that "there's no making them comprehend the plainest " proposition - in the beginning of the war, this " poor half-witted creature told me, in a great fright, "that thirty thousand French had marched from " Acadie to Cape Breton" __ " Where did they " find transports? (faid 1)" " Transports! (cried he) " I tell you, they marched by land"Ind to the island of Cape Briton!" "What! is "Cape Briton an island?" Certainly. "Ha! are you sure of that?" When I pointed it out in the map, he exclaimed it earnestly with his spectacles; then taking me in his arms, "My dear C——! (cried he) you always bring us good news—Egad! "I'll go directly, and tell the king that Cape Breton is an island——"

He seemed disposed to entertain us with more anecdotes of this nature, at the expence of his grace, when he was interrupted by the arrival of the Algerine ambaffidor, a venerable furk, with a long white beard, attended by his dragoman, or interpreter, and another officer of his household, who had got no flockings to his legs-Captain C --- immediately fpoke with an air of authority to a Tervant in waiting, bidding him go and tell the Dake to rife, as there was a great deal of company come, and among others, the ambaffidor from Algiers Then turning to us, "This poor Turk, (faid he) notwithstanding his " gray beard, is a green horn—He has been feveral "Tears refident at London, and still is ignorant of " our political revolutions. This vifit is intended for " the prime minister of England; but you'll fee how " this wife Duke will receive it as a mark of attach-" ment to his own person-" Certain it is, the Duke feemed eager to acknowledge the compliment A door opening, he fuddenly bolted out, with a flaving cloath under his chin, his face frothed up to the eyes with foap lather; and, running up to the ambaffador, grinned hideous in his face____ "My " dear Mahomet! (faid he) God love your long " beard, I hope the dey will make you a horsetail "but a moment's patience, and I'll fend to you in a twinkling ____ " So faving, he retreated into his den, leaving the Turk in some confusion. After a fort paule, however, he faid something to nis :

his interpreter, the meaning of which I had great curiofity to know, as he turned up his eyes while he fpoke, expressing astonishment, mixed with devotion -We were gratified by means of the communicative Captain C-, who converted with the dragoman as an old acquaintance, Ibrahim, the ambaffador, who had mistaken his grace for the minister's fool, was no fooner undeceived by the interpreter, than he exclaimed to this effect - "Holy prophet! I don't " wonder that this nation profpers, feeing it is gowerned by the counsel of ideots; a series of men, " whom all good muffelmen revere as the organs of " immediate inspiration!" Ibrahim was favoured with a particular audience of fhort duration; after which the Duke conducted him to the door, and then returned to diffuse his practious looks among the crowd of his worshippers.

As Mr Barton advanced to present me to his grace, it was my fortune to attract his notice, before I was announced-----He forthwith met me more than half way, and feizing me by the hand, "My " dear Sir Francis! (cried he) this is fo kind-" vow to God! I am fo obliged Such attention to "a poor broken minister——Well—Pray when " does your excellency fet fail? - For God's fake " have a care of your health, and eat stewed prunes " in the paffage-Next to your own precious health, " pray, my dear excellency, take care of the Five Na-" tions-Our good friends the Five Nations-The "Toryrories, the Maccolmacks, the Out-o'the ways, " the Crickets, and the Kickshaws-Let 'em have " plenty of blankets, and stinkubus, and wampum; " and your excellency won't fail to fcour the kettle, . and boil the chain, and bury the tree, and plant "the hatchet-Ha, ha, ha!" When he had uttered this rhapfody, with his usual precipitation, Mr Barton gave him to understand, that I was neither

Sir Francis, nor St Francis; but simple Mr Melford, nephew to Mr Bramble, who, stepping forward, made his bow at the fame time. " Odfo! no more it is "Sir Francis-(faid this wife ftatesman) Mr Me'-" ford, I am glad to fee you-I fent you an engineer " to fortify your dock ____ Mr Bramble __your fer-" vant Mr Bramble-How d'ye, good Mr Bramble? "Your nephew is a pretty young fellow-Faith and " troth, a very pretty fellow !- His father is my "old friend-How does he hold it? Still troubled " with that damned diforder, ha?" " No, my lord, " (replied my uncle) all his troubles are over-He " has been dead these fifteen years." " Dead! how Yes, faith! now I remember: he is dead, " fure enough-Well, and how-does the young " gentleman stand for Haverford West? or-a-" what d'ye-My dear Mr Milfordhaven, I'll do you " all the fervice in my power-I hope I have fome " credit left"-My uncle then gave him to understand, that I was still a minor; and, that we had no intention to trouble him at present for any favour whatfoever-"I came hither with my nephew (added " he) to pay our respects to your Grace; and I may wenture to fay, that, his views and mine, are at leaft " as difinterested, as those of any individual in this " affembly." " My dear Mr Brambleberry! you do me infinite honour-I shall always rejoice to fee 4 you and your hopeful nephew, Mr Milfordhaven-" My credit, fuch as it is, you may command-I wish " we had more friends of your kidney-"

Then, turning to captain C, "Ha, C! (faid he) what news, C. ? How does the world wag? ha!" "The world wags much after the old fashion, my lord: (answered the captain) the politicians of London and Westminster, have begun again to wag their tongues against your Grace; and your short-lived popularity wags like a fea-

" ther, which the next puff of antiministerial calumny " will blow away !-" " A pack of rafcals (cried the "Duke)-Tories, Jacobites, rebels; one half of them " would wag their heels at Tyburn if they had their " deferts-" So faying, he wheeled about; and, going round the levee, spoke to every individual, with the most courteous familiarity; but he scarce ever o- . pened his mouth without making fome blunder, in relation to the person or business of the party with whom he conversed; fo that he really looked like a comedian hired to burlefque the character of a minifter-At length a person of a very prepossessing appearance coming in, his grace ran up, and hugging him in his arms, with the appellation of " My dear " Ch___ 3 !" led him forthwith into the inner apartment, or Sanctum Sanctorum of this political temple. "That (faid Captain C-) is my friend C-T-, a almost the only man of parts who has any concern in the present administration-Indeed, he would " have no concern at all in the matter, if the ministry edid not find it absolutely necessary to make use of " his talents upon some particular occasions --- As for of the common business of the nation, it is carried on " in a constant routine by the clerks of the different " offices, otherwife the wheels of government would " be wholly stopt amidst the abrupt fuccession of mini-" fters, every one more ignorant than his preducer"r " _I am thinking what a fine hovel we flour be in. " if all the clerks of the treasury, of the iccretaries, " the war office, and the admirality. Lipuld take it in " their heads to throw up their places in imitation of " the great penfioner .- But to return to C-T- he " certainly knows more than all the ministry and all "the opposition, if their heads were laid together, " and talks like an angel on a vast variety of subjects "---He would really be a great man, if he had any " confidency or stability of character-Then it must

" be owned, he wants courage, otherwise he would " never allow himself to be cowed by the great poli-" tical bully, for whose understanding he has justly a " very great contempt. I have feen him as much a-" fraid of that overbearing Hector, as ever a school-" boy was of his pedagogue; and yer this Hector, I " shroudly suspect, is no more than a craven at bot-" tom_Befides this defect, C_has another which he " is at too little pains to hide-There's no faith " to be given to his affertions, and no trust to be put " in his promises However, to give the devil his "due, he's very good natured; and even friendly, "when close urged in the way of folicitation --- As " for principle, that's out of the question - In a " word, he is a wit and an orator, extremely entertain-" ing, and he shines very often at the expence even of " those ministers to whom he is a retainer - This is " a mark of great imprusence, by which he has made "them all his enemies, whatever face they may have " put upon the matter: and fooner or later he'll bare " cause to wish he had been able to keep his own "counfel-I have several times cautioned him on "this fubject; but he's all preaching to the defert-"His vanity runs away with his discretion"-I could not help thinking the Captain himfelf might have been the better for some hints of the same nature.-His panegyric, excluding principle and veracity, puts me in mind of a contest I once overheard, in the way of altercation, betwixt two apple-women in Spring-Garden One of those viragos having hinted fomething to the prejudice of the other's moral character, her antagonist setting her hand in her fides, replied, " Speak out, huffy --- I fcorn your " malice I own I'm both a whore and a thief; and what more have you to fay? - Damn you, what more have you to fay; bating that, which " all the world knows, I challenge you to fay " black

"black is the white of my eye——" We did not wait for Mr T——'s coming forth; but after Captain C——had characterifed all the originals in waiting, we adjourned to a coffee-house, where we had buttered mussins and tea to breakfast, the said Captain still savouring us with his company—Nay, my uncle was so diverted with his anecdotes, that he asked him to dinner, and treated him with a fine turbot, to which he did ample justice—That same evening I spent at the tavern with some friends, one of whom let me into C——'s character, which Mr Bramble no sooner understood, than he expressed some concern for the connection he had made, and resolved to disengage himself from it without ceremony.

We are become members of the Society, for the Encouragement of the Arts, and have affifted at fome of their deliberations, which were conducted with equal spirit and fagacity-My uncle is extreme-1, fond of the inflitution, which will be certainly proourive of great advantages to the public, it from its democratical form, it does not degenerate into cabal and corruption-You are already acquainted with his aversion to the influence of the multitude, which he affirms, is incompatible with excellence, and fubverfive of order-Indeed this detestation of the mob has been heightened by fear, ever fince he fainted in the room at Bath; and this apprehension has prevented him from going to the little Theatre in the Hay-market, and other places of entertainment, to which, however, I have had the honour to attend the ladies.

It grates old Square-Toes to reflect, that it is not in his power to enjoy even the most elegant diversions of the capital, without the participation of the vulgar; for they now thrust themselves into all assemblies, from a ridotto at St James', to a hop at Rotherhithe.

I have lately seen our old acquaintance Dick Ivy, who we imagined had died of dram drinking; but he is lately emerged from the Fleet, by means of a pamphlet which he wrote and published against the government with some success. The sale of this performmance enabled him to appear in clean linen, and he is now going about soliciting subscriptions for his Poems; but his breeches are not yet in the most decent order.

Dick certainly deserves some countenance for his intrepidity and perseverance-It is not in the power of disappointment, nor even of damnation, to drive him to despair After some unsuccessful essays in the way of poetry, he commenced brandy merchant, and I beleive, his whole flock ran out through his own bowels; then he conforted with a milk woman, who kept a cellar in Petty France: but he could not make his quarters good: he was dislodged and driven up stairs into the kennel by a corporal in the second regiment of foot-guards He was afterwards the laureat of Blackfriars, from whence there was a natural transition to the fleet - As he had formerly mifcarried in panegyric, he now turned his thoughts to fatire, and really feems to have fome talent for abuse. If he can hold out till the meeting of the parliament and be prepared for another charge, in all probability Dick will mount the pillory, or obtain a pention, in either of which events his fortune will be made-Mean while he has acquired fome degree of confideration with the respectable writers of the age; and as I have subscribed for his works, he did me the favour t'other night to introduce me to a fociety of those genuises; but I found them exceedingly formal and referved-They seemed afraid and jealous of one another, and fat in a flate of mutual repulsion, like fo many particles of vapour, each furrounded by its own electrified atmosphere. Dick, who has more vivacity than judgment, tried more than once to enliven liven the conversation; sometimes making an effort at wit, fometimes letting off a pun, and fometimes difcharging a conundrum; nay, at length, he flarted a dispute upon the hackneyed comparison betwixt blank verse and rhyme, and the prosessors opened with great clamour; but, initead of keeping to the subject, they touched out into tedious differtations on the poetry of the ancients; and one of them, who had been a school-master, displayed his whole knowledge of profody, gleaned from Disputer and Ruddiman. last, I ventured to fay, I did not see how the subject in question could be at all elucidated by the practice of the antients, who certainly had neither blank verse nor rhyme in their poems, which were meafured by feet, whereas ours are reckoned by the number of tyllables This remark feemed to give umbrage to the pedant, who forthwith involved himfelf in a cloud of Greek and Latin quotations, which nobody attempted to difpel-A confused hum of infipid observations and comments enfued, and upon the whole, I never passed a duller evening in my life-Yet, without all doubt, some of them were men of learning, wit, and ingenuity. As they are afraid of making free with one another, they should bring each his but, or whetftone, along with him, for the entertainment of the company. My uncle fays he never defires to meet with more than one wit at a time-One wit, like a knuckle of ham in foup, gives zeft and flavour to the dish; but more than one ferves only to spoil the pottage-And now I'm afraid I have given you an unconscionable mess, without any flavour at all: for which, I suppose, you will bestow your benedictions upon

Your friend and fervant,

J. MELFORD.

To Dr LEWIS.

DEAR LEWIS,

YOUR fable of the monkey and the pig, is what the Italians call bentrovata: but I shall not repeat it to my apothecary, who is a proud Scotfman, very thin skinned, and, for aught I know, may have his degree in his pocket—A right Scotsman has always two strings to his bow, and is in utrumque paratus——Certain it is, I have not scaped a scouring; but, I believe, by means of that scouring, I have scaped something worse, perhaps a tedious sit of the gout or theumatism; for my appetite began to slagg, and I had certain croakings in the bowels which boded me no good——Nay, I am not yet quite free of these remembrances, which warn me to be gone from this centre of infection—

What temptation can a man of my turn and temperament have, to live in a place where every corner teems with fresh objects of detestation and disgust? What kind of taste and organs must those people have, who really prefer the adulterate enjoyments of the town to the genuine pleasures of a country retreat? Most people, I know, are originally seduced by vanity, ambition, and childish curiosity; which cannot be gratisted, but in the busy baunts of men: but, in the course of this gratistication, their very organs of sense are perverted, and they become habitually lost to every relish of what is genuine and excellent in its own nature.

Shall I state the difference between my town grievances, and my country comforts? At Brambleton-hall, I have elbow-room within doors, and breathe a clear, elastic, salutary air I enjoy Vol. I.

refreshing sleep, which is never disturbed by horrid noife, nor interrupted, but in a morning, by the fweet twitter of the martlet at my window. I drink the virgin lymph, pure and crystalline as it gushes from the rock, or the sparkling beveridge, home-brewed from malt of my own making; or I indulge with cyder, which my own orchard affords; or with claret of the best growth, imported for my own use, by a correspondent on whose integrity, I can depend; my bread is fweet and nourishing made from my own wheat, ground in my own mill, and baked in my own oven; my table is, in a great measure, surnished from my own ground; my five year old mutton, fed on the fragant herbage of the mountains, that might vie with venison in juice and flavour; my delicious veal, fattened with nothing but the mother's milk, that fills the difh with gravy; my poultry from the barn door, that never knew confinement, but when they are at rooft; my rabbits panting from the warren; my game fresh from the moors; my trout and falmon flruggling from the fiream; oysters from their native banks; and herrings, with other sea-fish, I can eat in four hours after they are taken ____ My fallads, roots, and pot-herbs, my own garden yields in plenty and perfection; the produce of the natural foil, prepared by moderate cultivation. The fame foil affords all the different fruits which England may call her own, to that my defert is every day fresh gathered from the tree; my dairy flows with nectarious tides of milk and cream. from whence we derive abundance of excellent butter, curd, and cheese; and the refuse fattens my pigs, that are destined for hams and ba--I go to bed betimes, and rife with the fun I make shift to pass the hours without wearinefs or regret, and am not destitute of amusements within doors, when the weather will not permit permit me to go abroad -I read, and chat, and play at billards, cards, or back-gammon-Without doors, I fuperintend my farm, and execute plans of improvement, the effects of which I enjoy with unspeakable delight -Nor do I take less pleasure in seeing my tenants thrive under my auspices, and the poor live. comfortably by the employment which I provide ---You know have one or two fensible friends, to whom I can open all my heart; a bleffing which, perhaps, I might have fought in vain among the crowded scenes of life, there are a few others of more humble parts, whom I esteem for their integrity; and their converfacion I find inoffensive, though not very entertaining. Finally, I live in the midst of bonest men; and trusty dependants, who, I flatter myfelf, have a difinterefted attachment to my perion ____ You, yourfelf, my dear Doctor, can vouch for the truth of these affertions.

Now, mark the contrast at London ____ I am pent up in frowzy lodgings, where there is not room enough to fwing a cat; and I breathe the ficams of endless putrefaction, and these would, undoubtedly, produce a peftilence, if they were not qualified by the gross acid of sea coal, which is itself a pernicious nuifance to lungs of any delicacy of texture: but even this boafted corrector cannot prevent those languid fallow looks, that diftinguish the inhabitants of London from those ruddy swains that lead a country life ---- I go to bed after midnight, jaded and restless from the distipations of the day ____ -I ftart every hour from my fleep, at the horrid noise of the watchmen bawling the hour through every fireet, and thundering at every door; a fet of uteless fellows, who ferve no other purpole but that of diffurbing the repole of the inhabitants: and, by five o'clock, I started out of bed. in consequence of the still more dreadful alarm. P 2 made made by the the country carts, and noify rustics bellowing green pease under my window. If I would drink water, I must quast the maukish contents of an open aqueduct, exposed to all manner of defilement; or swallow that which comes from the river Thames, impregnated with all the filth of London and Westminster———Human excrement is the least offensive part of the concrete, which is composed of all the drugs, minerals, and poisons, used in mechanics, and manufactures, enriched with the putrefying carcases of beasts and men; and mixed with the scourings of all the wash tubs, kennels, and common sewers, within the bills of morta-

This is the agreeable potation, extolled by the Londoners, as the finest water in the universe--- As to the intoxicating potion, fold for wine, it is a vile, unpalatable, and pernicious fophistication, balderdashed with cyder, corn-spirit, and the juice of sloes. In an action at law, laid against a carman for having staved a calk of port, it appeared from the evidence of the cooper, that there were not above five gallons of real wine in the whole pipe, which held above an hundred, and even that had been brewed and adulterated by the merchant at Oporto. The bread I eat in London, is a deleterious paste, mixed up with chalk, alum, and bone-ashes; insipid to the taste, and destructive to the conflitution. The good people are not ignorant of this adulteration; but they prefer it to wholesome bread, because it is whiter than the meal of corn: thus they facilifice their tafte and their health, and the lives of their tender infants, to a most absurd gratification of a mis judging eye; and the miller, or the baker, is obliged to poison them and their families, in order to live by his profession. The same monstrous depravity appears in their yeal, which is bleached by repeated bleedings, ings, and other villainous arts, till there is not a drop of juice left in the body, and the poor animal is paralytic before it dies; so void of all taste, nourishment, and slavour, that a man might dine as comfortably on a white fricasse of kid skin gloves, or chip hats from Leghorn.

As they have discharged the natural colour from their bread, their butchers meat, and poultry, their cutlets, ragouts, fricaffees, and fauces of all kinds; fo they infift upon having the complexion of their pot. herbs mended, even at the hazard of their lives. Perhaps, you will hardly believe they can be fo mad as to boil their greens with brass halfpence, in order to improve their colour; and yet nothing is more true-Indeed, without this improvement in the colour, they have no personal merit. They are produced in an artificial foil, they tafte of nothing but the dunghills. from whence they fpring. My cabbage, cauliflower, and 'sparagus in the country, are as much superior in flavour to those that are fold in Covent Garden, as my heath-mutton is to that of St James's-market; which, in fact, is neither lamb nor mutton, but fomething betwixt the two, gorged in the rank fens of Lincoln and Effex, pale, course, and frowzy ----- As for the pork, it is an abominable carnivorous animal, fed with horse flesh and distillers grains; and the poultry is all rotten, in confequence of a fever, occasioned by the infamous practice of fewing up the gut, that they may be the fooner fattened in coops, in consequence of this cruel retention.

Of the fish, I need say nothing in this hot weather, but that it comes sixty, seventy, sourscore, and a hundred miles by land-carriage; a circumstance sufficient, without any comment, to turn a Dutchman's stomach, even if his nose was not saluted in every ally with the sweet slavour of P₃ fresh to be had for love or money.

It must be owned, that Covent Garden affords fome good fruit; which, however, is always engroffed by a few individuals of over-grown fortune, at an exorbitant price: fo that little elfe than the refuse of the market falls to the share of the community; and that is distributed by fuch filthy hands, as I cannot look at without loathing. It was but yesterday that I saw a dirty barrow bunter in the ftreet, cleaning her dufty fruit with her own spittle; and, who knows but some fine lady of St James's parish might admit into her delicate mouth those very cherries, which had been rolled and moistened between the filthy, and, perhaps ulcerated chops of a St Giles's huckster --- I need not dwell upon the palid, contaminated mash, which they call strawberries; soiled and toffed by greafy paws through twenty baskets crushed with dirt; and then presented with the worst milk, thickened with the worst flour, into a bad likeness of cream; but the milk itself should not pass unanalysed, the produce of faded cabbage-leaves and four draff, lowered with hot water, frothed with bruifed faails, carried through the streets in open pails, exposed to foul rinfings, discharged from doors and windows, spittle, snot, and tobacc-oquids from foot-passengers, overflowings Howings from mud-carts, spatterings from coach-wheels, dirt and trash chucked into it by roguish boys for the joke's sake, the spewings of infants, who have slabbered in the tin-measure, which is thrown back in that condition among the milk, for the benefit of the next customer; and, finally, the vermin that drops from the rags of the nasty drab that vends this precious mixture, under the respectable denomination of milk-maid.

I shall conclude this catalogue of London dainties, with that table-beer, guiltless of hops and malt, vapid and nauseous, much fitter to fecilitate the operation of a vomit, than to quench thirst and promote digestion; the tallowy, rancid mass, called butter, manufactured with candle-greafe and kitchenstuff; and their fresh eggs, imported from France and Scotland _____Now, all these enormities might be remedied with a very little attention to the article of police, or civil regulation; but the wife patriots of London have taken it into their heads that all regulation is inconfiftant with liberty; and that every man ought to live in his own way, without restraint --- Nay, as there is not fense enough left among them, to be discompoled by the nuifances I have mentioned, they may, for aught I care, wallow in the mire of their own pollution.

A companionable man will, undoubtedly, put up with many inconvencies for the fake of enjoying agreeable fociety. A facetious friend of mine used to say, the wine could not be bad, where the company was agreeable; a maxim which, however, ought to be taken cum grano falis: but what is the society of London, that I should be tempted for its sake, to mortify my senses, and compound with such uncleanness as my soul ab-

hors? All the people I fee, are too much engroffed by schemes of interest or ambition, to have any room left for fentiment or friendship-Even in some of my old acquaintance, those schemes and pursuits have obliterated all traces of our former connexion -- Conversation is reduced to partydisputes, and illiberal altercation - Social commerce, to formal vifits and card-playing --- If you pick up a diverting original by accident, it may be dangerous to amuse yourself with his addities -- He is generally a tartar at bottom; a sharper, a spy, or a lunatic. Every person you deal with endeavours to over-reach you in the way of business; you are preyed uponby idle mendicants, who beg in the phrase of borrowing, and live upon the spoils of the stranger-Your tradefmen are without conscience, your friends without affection, and your dependents without fidelity .-

My letter would swell into a treatise, were I to particularize every cause of offence that fills up the measure of my aversion to this, and every other crowded city——I thank Heaven! I am not so far sucked into the vortex, but that I can disengage mysfelf without any great effort of philosophy——From this wild upoar of knavery, folly, and impertinence, I shall sly with double relish to the serenity of retirement, the cordial effusions of unreserved friendship, the hospitality and protection of the rural gods; in a word, the jucunda oblivia vitae, which Horace himself had not taste enough to en-

I have agreed for a good travelling-coach and four, at a guinea a-day, for three months certain; and next week we intend to begin our journey to the North, hoping still to be with you by the latter end of October——I shall continue to write from every stage where we make any considerable halt, as often as any thing occurs, which I think can afford you the least amusement. In the mean time, I must beg you will superintend the economy of Barns, with respect to my hay and corn harvest; affured that my ground produces nothing but what you may freely call your own—On any other terms I should be a hamed to subscribe myself.

Your unvariable friend

London, June 8.

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Burt. of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR PHILLIPS.

N my last, I mentioned my having spent the evening with a fociety of authors, who feemed to be jealous and afraid of one another. My uncle was not at all surprised to hear me say I was disappointed in their conversation. " A man may be very entertain-"ing and inftructive upon paper, (faid he) and ex-"ceedingly dull in common discourse. I have ob-" ferved, that those who shine most in private, com-" pany, are but fecondary stars in the constellation of " genius - A fmall stock of ideas is more easily mana-" ged, and fooner displayed, than a great quantity " crowded together. There is very feldom any thing "extraordinary in the appearance and address of a "good writer, whereas a dull author generally diffin-"guishes himself by some oddity or extravagance." For this reason, I fancy that an assembly of Grubs, " must be very diverting."

My curiofity being excited by this hint, I confulted my friend Dick Ivy, who undertook to gratify it the very next day, which was Sunday lastHe carried me to dine with S-n, whom you and in the skirts of the town, and every Sunday his house is open-to all unfortunate brothers of the quill, whom he treats with beef, pudding, and potatoes, port, punch, and Calvert's entire butt-beer .--He has fixed upon the first day of the week for the exercise of his hospitality, because some of his guests could not enjoy it on any other, for reafons that I need not explain. I was civilly received in a plain, yet decent habitation, which opened backwards into a very pleafant garden, kept in excellent order; and, indeed I faw none of the outward figns of authorship, either in the house or the landlord, who is one of those few writers of the age that fland upon their own foundation, without patronage, and above dependence. If there was nothing characteristic in the entertainer, the company made ample amends for his want of fingularity.

At two in the afternoon, I found myfelf one of ten mels-mates feated at table; and, I queffior, if the whole kingdom could produce fuch another affeniblage of originals. Among their peculiarities, I do not mention those of dress, which may be purely accidental. What struck me were oddities originally produced by affectation, and afterwards confirmed by habit. One of them wore spectacles at dinner, and another, his hat flapped; though (as Ivy told me) the first was noted for having a seaman's eye, when a bailiff was in the wind; and the other was never known to labour under any weakness or defect of vition, except about five years ago, when he was complimented with a couple of black eyes by a player, with whom he had quarrelled in his drink. A third wore a laced stocking, and made infe of crutche, because, once in his life, he had been aid up with a broken leg, though no man could leap over a flick with more agility. A fourth had contracted fuch an antipathy to the country, that he infifted upon fitting with his back towards the window that looked into the garden and when a dish of cauliflower was fet upon the table, he snuffed up volatile salts to keep him from fainting; yet this delicate person was the fon of a cottager, born under a hedge, and had many years run wild among affes on a common. A fifth affected diffraction ____ When fpoke to, he always answered from the purpose-fometimes he fuddenly frarted up, and rapped out a dreadful oath. -fometimes he burft out a laughing-then he folded his arms, and fighed and then he hiffed like fifty ferpents.

At first, I really thought he was mad, and, as he fat near me, began to be under some apprehensions for my own fafety, when our landlord, perceiving me alarmed, affured me aloud, that I had nothing to fear -" The gentleman (faid he) is trying to act a part, " for which he is by no means qualified ___ if he had " all the inclination in the world, it is not in his " power to be mad. His spirits are too flat to be "kindled into frenzy." "Tis no bad p-p-puff, how-" ow-ever, (observed a person in a tarmshed laced " coat); aif-ifected m-madness w-will p-pass for w- wit " w-with nins-nin -teen out of t-twenty."-" And " affected stuttering for humour; replied our land-" lord, though, God knows, there is no affinity " betwixt them "____It feems, this wag, after having made some abortive attempts in plain ipeaking, had recourse to this detect, by means of which he frequently extorted the laugh of the company, without the left expence of genius; and that imperf ction, which he had at first counterfeited, was now become fo habitual, that he could not lay itafide.

A certain winking genius, who wore yellow gloves at dinner, had on his first introduction. taken such offence at S_____, because he looked and talked, and ate and drank like any other man, that he fpoke contemptuously of his understanding ever after, and never would repeat his vifit, until he had exhibited the following proof of his caprice. Wat Wyvil, the poet, having made some unfuccefsful advances towards an intimacy with Sat last gave him to understand, by a third person, that he had written a poem in his praife, and a fatire against his person; that if he would admit him to his house, the first should be immediately fent to press; but that if he persisted in declining his friendthip, he would publish the fatire without delay. Sreplied, that he looked upon Wyvil's panegyric, as in effect, a species of infamy, and would refent it accordingly with a good cudgel; but if he published the fatire, he might deferve his compassion and had nothing to fear from his revenge. Wyvil having confidered the alternative, refolved to mortify S____, by printing the panegyric, for which he received a found drubbing. Then he fwore the peace against the aggressor, who, in order to avoid a prosecution at law, admitted him to his good graces. It was the fingularity in S____'s conduct on this occasion, that reconciled him to the yellow-glaved philosopher, who owned he had fome genius, and from that period cultivated his acquaintance.

Curious to know upon what subjects the several talents of my sellow-guests were employed, I applied to my communicative friend Dick Ivy, who gave me to understand, that most them were, or had been, understrappers, or journeymen, to more creditable authors, for whom they translated, collated, and complied, in the business of book making; and that all of them had, at different times, laboured in the service of our landlords though they had now set up for themselves in var ous departments of literature. Not only their talents, but also their nations and dialogues were so various, that our conversation resembled the confu-fion of tongues at Babel.

We had the Irish brogue, the Scotch accent, and foreign idiom, twanged off by the most discordant vociferation; for, as they all spoke together, no man had any chance to be heard unless he could bawl louder than his fellows. It must be owned, however, there was nothing pedantic in their discourse; they carefully avoided all learned disquisitions, and endeavoured to be facetious; nor did their endeavours always miscarry.—Some droll repartee passed, and much laughter was excited; and if any individual lost his temper so far as to transgress the bounds of decorum, he was effectually checked by the master of the feast, who exerted a sort of paternal authority over this irritable tribe.

The most learned philosopher of the whole collection, who had been expelled the university for atheism, has made great progress in a resutation of lord Bolingbroke's metaphysical works, which is said to be equally ingenious and orthodox; but, in the mean time, he has been presented to the grand jury as a public nuisance, for having blasphemed in an alchouse on the Lord's day. The Scotchman gives lecture's on the pronunciation of the English language, which he is now publishing by subscription.

The Irishman is a political writer, and goes by the name of my Lord Potatoe. He wrote a pamphlet in vindication of a minister, hoping his zeal would be rewarded with some place or pension; but finding himself neglected in that quarter, he whispered about, that the pamphlet was written by the Vol I.

minister himself, and he published an answer to his own production. In this he addressed the author under the title of your lordship, with such solemnity, that the public swallowed the deceit, and bought up the whole impression. The wise politicians of the metropolis declared, they were both masterly performances, and chuckled over the slimsy reveries of an ignorant garreteer, as the prosound speculations of a veteran statesman, acquainted with all the secrets of the cabinet. The impossure was detected in the sequel, and our Hibernian pamphleteer retains no part of his assumed importance, but the bare tittle of my lord, and the upper part of the table at the potatoe ordinary in Shoe-lane.

Opposite to me sat Piedmontese, who had obliged the public with a humorous satire, intitled, The Balance of the English Poets, a performance which evinced the great modesty and taste of the author, and, in particular, his intimacy with the elegancies of the English language. The sage, who laboured under the exp. Com, or borror of green fields, had just finished a treatise on practical agriculture, though, in sact, he had never seen corn growing in his life, and was so ignorant of grain, that our entertainer; in the sace of the whole company, made him own, that a plate of hominy was the best rice-pudding he had ever eat.

The stutterer had almost sinished his travels through Europe and part of Asia, without ever budging beyond the liberties of the King's Bench, except in term time, with a tip-staff for his companion; and as for little Tim Cropdale, the most facctious member of the whole society, he had happily wound up the catastrophe of a virgin tragedy, from the exibition of which, he promised himself a large fund of profit and reputation. Tim had made shift to live many years by writing novels at the rate of five pounds a volume; but that branch of business is now engrossed by female authors, who publish merely for the propagation of virtue, with so much ease, and spirit, and delicacy, and knowledge of the human heart, and all in the serene tranquillity of high life, that the reader is not only inchanted by their genius, but reformed by their mo-

After dinner we adjourned into the garden where, I observed Mr S ____ gave a short separate audience: to every individual in a finall remote filbert walk, from whence most of them dropped off one after another, without further ceremony; but they were replaced by fresh recruits of the same clan, who came to make an afternoons visit; and, among others, a foruce bookfeller, called Birkin, who rode his own gelding, and made his appearance in a pair of new jeminy boots, with mally spars of plate. It was not without reason that this midwife of the muses used to exercise a horseback, for he was too fat to walk afoot, and he underwent fome farcasms from Tim Cropdale, on his unweildly fize and inaptitude for motion. Birkin, who took umbrage at this poor auther's petulance, in prefuming to joke upon a man fo. much richer than himfelf, told him, he was not fo unwieldly but that he could move the Marshelfea court for a writ, and even overtake him with it, if he did not very speedily come and settle accounts with him, respecting the expences of publishing his last Ole to the king of Prussia, of which, he had fold but three, and one of them was to Whitefield the Methodift. Tim affected to receive this intimation with good humour, faying, he expected in a post or two, from Potsdam, a poem of thanks from his Prussian Majesty, who knew very well how to pay poets in their own coin; but, in the mean time, he proposed, that Mr Birkin and him should run three times round the garden for a bowl of punch, to be drank drank at Ashly's in the evening, and he would run boots against slockings. The bookseller, who valued himself upon his mettle, was persuaded to accept the challenge, and he forthwith resigned his boots to Cropdale, who, when he had put them on, was no bad representation of Captain Pistol in the play.

Every thing being adjusted, they started together with great impetuofity, and in the fecond round, Birkin had clearly the advantage, larding the lean earth as be puff'd along. Cropdale had no mind to contest the victory further, but, in a twinkling, disappeared through the back-door of the garden, which opened into a private lane, that had communication with the high road ____ The spectators immediately began to hallo, "Stole away!" and Birkin fet off in purfuit of him with great eagerness; but he had not advanged twenty yards in the lane, when a thorn running into his foot, fent him hopping back into the garden, roaring with pain, and fwearing with vexation. When he was delivered from this annoyance by the Scotchman, who had been bred to furgery, he looked about him wildly, exclaiming, " Sure, the fel-" low won't be fuch a rogue as to run clear away with "my boots!" Our landlord, having reconnoitered the shoes he had left, which, indeed, hardly deserved the name, " Pray, (faid he) Mr Birkin, " wa'n't your boots made of calf-skin? " Calf; " fkin or cow-fkin, (replied the other) I'll find a " loft wenty pounds by his farce, which you perfua-" ded me so buy -- I am out of pecket five pounds by " his damn'd Ode; and now this pair of boots, bran " new, cost me thirty shillings, as per receipt-" But this affair of the boots is felony ____transporta-" tion-Pil have the dog indicted at the Old Bai-" ley_I will, Mr S____. I will be revenged, er even even though I should lose my debt in consequence of his conviction."

Mr S ____ faid nothing at present, but accommodated him with a pair of shoes; then ordered his fervant to rub him down, and comfort him with a glass of rum punch, which seemed, in a great measure, to cool the rage of his indignation. " After all, (faid " our landlord) this is no more than a humbug in the " way of wit, though it deferves a more respectable " epithet, when confidered as an effort of invention. "Tim being, I suppose, out of credit with the cord-" wainer, fell upon this ingenious expedient to supply " the want of fhoes,, knowing that Mr Birkin, who " loves humour, would himfelf relish the joke upon " a little recollection. Cropdale literally lives by his " wit, which he has exercifed upon all his friends in " their turns. He once borrowed my poney for five " or fix days, to go to Salisbury, and fold him in "Smithfield at his return. This was a joke of fuch " a ferious nature, that in the first transports of my " paffion, I had fome thoughts of profecuting him " for horse-stealing; and, even when my resentment " had in some measure subsided, as he industriously " avoided me, I vowed I would take fatisfaction " on his ribs with the first opportunity. One day " feeing him at fome distance in the street, coming "towards me, I began to prepare my cane for action, and walked in the shadow of a porter, that " he might not perceive me foon enough to make "his escape; but, in the very instant I had lifted "up the inftrument of correction, I found Tim "Cropdale metamorphofed into a miserable blind "wretch, feeling his way with a long flick from " post to post, and rolling about two bald unlight-"ed orbs instead of eyes. I was extremely " shocked at having fo narrowly escaped the con-

r cern and difgrace that would have attended fuch a misapplication of vengeance; but, next day Tim of prevailed upon a friend of mine to come and folicit " my forgiveness, and offer his note, payable in fix " weeks, for the price of the poney .- This gentle-" man gave me to understand, that the blind man was " no other than Cropdale, who having feen me ad-" vancing, and gueffing my intent, had immediately " converted himself into the object aforesaidwas fo diverted with the ingenuity of the invafion, "that I agreed to pardon his offence, refusing his note, however, that I might keep a profecution for felony hanging over his head, as a fecurity for his future good behaivour-But Timothy would by " no means trust himself in my hands till the note was accepted ____ then he made his appearance at " my door as a blind beggar, and imposed in fuch a " manner upon my man, who had been his old ac-" quaintance and pot-companion, that the fellow threw the door in his face, and even threatened to " give him the bastinado. Hearing a noise in the hall, "I went thither, and immediately recollecting the " figure I had passed in the street, accosted him by " his own name, to the unspeakable astonishment of " the footman,"

Birkin declared he loved a joke as well as another; but asked if any of the company could tell where Mr Cropdale lodged, that he might send him a proposal about restitution, before the boots should be made away with. "I would willingly give him a pair of new shoes, (said he) and half a guinea into the bargain, for the boots, which sitted me like a glove, and I shan't be able to get the sellows of them till the good weather for riding is over." The stuttering wit desclared, that the only secret which Cropdale ever kept was the place of his lodgings; but, he believed,

After coffee, I took leave of Mr S with proper acknowledgments of his civility, and was extremely well pleased with the entertainment of the day, though not yet satisfied with respect to the nature of this connection between a man of character in the literary world, and a parcel of authorlings, who in all probability, would never be able to acquire any degree of reputation by their labours. On this head I interrogated my conductor, Dick Ivy, who answered me to this effect : " One would imagine S-" had some view to his own interest, in giving coun-"tenance and affistance to those people, whom he "knows to be bad men, as well as bad writers, but " if he has any fuch view, he will find himself dif-"appointed; for if he is fo vain as to imagine he " can make them subservient to his schemes of pro-"fit or ambition, they are curning enough to make "him their property in the mean time. There is " not one of the company you have feen to-day (myfelf "excepted) who does not owe him particular ob-"ligations. One of them he bailed out " of a spunging house, and afterwards paid the debt another he translated into his family, and " clothed, when he was turned out half-naked from " goal, in consequence of an act for the relief of in-" folvent debtors _____ a third, who was redu-" ced to a woolen night cap, and lived upon sheep's-" trotters up three pair of stairs backward in " Butcher-

"Butcher-row, he took into present pay and free " quarters, and enabled him to appear as a gentle-"man, without having the fear of sheriff's officers " before his eyes. Those who are in distress, he supor plies with money when he has it, and with his creof dir, when he is out of cash. When they want bu-" fine is, he either finds employment for them in his " own fervice, or recommends them to bookfellers, " to execute some project he had formed for their " ful fiftence. They are always welcome to his tato ble, (which though plain is plentiful) and to his " good offices as far as they will go; and when they " fee occasion, they make use of his name with the " most petulant familiarity; nay, they do not even " for uple to arrogate to themselves the merit of some of his performances, and have been known to fell "their own lucubrations as the produce of his The Scotfman you faw at dinner, once * brain. " personated him at an ale-house in West-Smithfield, " and, in the character of S_____, had his head "broke by a cow-keeper, for having spoke difre-" spectfully of the Christian religion; but he took of the law of him in his own person, and the affailant " was fain to give him ten pounds to withdraw his " action."

" favours, for they are all eager to detect and be-"tray one another."—" But this is doing the devil's work for nothing (cried I). What should "induce them to revile their benefactor without pro-" vocation ?" " Envy (answered Dick) is the general " incitement, but they are galled by an additional " scourge of provocation S --- directs a literary " journal, in which their productions are necessarily "brought to trial; and though many of them have " been treated with fuch lenity and favour as they lit-" tle deserved, yet the flightest censure, such as perhaps, could not be avoided with any pretentions to " candour and impartiality, has rankled in the hearts " of those authors to such a degree, that they have "taken immediate vengeance on the critic in anonymous libels, letters, and lampoons. In-" deed, all the writers of the age, good, bad, "and indifferent, from the moment he affumed "this office, became his enemies, either professed "or in petto, except those of his friends who knew "they had nothing to fear from his strictures; and, "he must be a wiser man than me, who can tell "what advantage or fatisfaction he derives from "having brought fuch a neft of hornets about his " ears."

I owned that was a point which might deserve consideration; but still I expressed a desire to know his real motives for continuing his friendship to a set of rascals equally ungrateful and insignificant.—
He said, he did not pretend to assign any reasonable motive; that, if the truth must be told, the man was, in point of conduct, a most incorrigible sool; that, though he pretended to have a knack at hitting off characters, he blundered strangely in the distribution of his savours, which were generally bestowed on the most undeserving of those who had recourse to his assistance; that, indeed, this preference was not so much owing to want of discernment as to want of resolution, for he had not fortitude enough to resist the importunity even of the most worthless; and as he did not know the value of money, there was very little merit in parting with it so easily; that his pride was gratisted in seeing himself courted by such a number of literary dependants: that, probably, he delighted in hearing them expose and traduce one another; and, finally, from their information, he became acquainted with all the transactions of Grub-street, which he had some thoughts of compiling, for the entertainment of the public.

I have dwelt so long upon authors, that you will perhaps suspect I intend to enroll myself among the fraternity; but, if I were actually qualified for the profession, it is at best but a desperate resource against starving, as it affords no provision for old age and insirmity. Salmon, at the age of sourceore, is now in a garret, compiling matter, at a guinea a sheet, for a modern historian, who, in point of age, might be his grand child; and Psalmonazor, after having drudged half a century in the literary mill, in all the simplicity and abstinence of an Asiatic, substitute upon the charity of a sew booksellers, just sufficient ficient to keep him from the parish——I think Guy, who was himself a bookseller, ought to have appropriated one wing or ward of his hospital to the use of decayed authors; though, indeed, there is neither hospital, college, or work-house, within the bills of mortality, large enough to contain the poor of this society, composed, as it is, from the resule of every other profession.

I know not whether you will find any amusement in this account of an odd race of mortals, whose constitution had, I own, greatly interested the curio-

Yours,

J. MELFORD.

To Mifs LÆTITIA WILLIS, at Gloucester.

he had recourse to the mediation of lady Griskin, who has acted the part of a very warm advocate in his behalf:—but, my dear Willis, her ladyship overacts her part—she not only expatiates on the ample fortune, the great connections, and the unblemished character of Mr Barton, but she takes the trouble to catechise me; and two days ago, peremptorily told me, that a girl of my age could not possibly resist so many considerations, if her heart was not pre-engaged.

This infinuation threw me into fuch a flutte that The could not but observe my disorder; and, prefuming upon the discovery, insisted upon my making her the confidante of my paffion. But although I had not fuch command of myfelf as to conceal the emotion of my heart, I am not fuch a child, as to disclose its fecrets to a person, who would certainly use them to its prejudice. I told her, it was no wonder if I was out of countenance, at her introducing a fubject of conversation so unsuitable to my years and inexperience: that I believed Mr Barton was a very worthy gentleman, and I was much obliged to him forhis good opinion; but the affections were involuntary, and mine, in particular, had as yet made no conceffions in his favour. She shook her head with an air of distrust that made me tremble; and observed, that if my affections were free, they would submit to the decision of prudence, especially, when enforced by the authority of those, who had a right to direct my conduct. This remark implied a defign to interest my uncle or my aunt, perhaps my brother, in behalf of Mr Barton's paffion; and, I am fadly afraid, that my aunt is already gained over. Yesterday in the forenoon, he had been walking with us in the Park, and stopping in our return at a toy-shop, he presented her with a very fine fnuff-box, and me with a gold etuis, which I resolutely resused, till she commanded

manded me to except it on pain of her displeasure: nevertheless, being still unsatisfied with respect to the propriety of receiving this toy, I signified my doubts to my brother, who said he would consult my uncle on the subject, and seemed to think Mr Barton had been rather premature in his prefents.

What will be the refult of this consultation, Heaven knows; but I am afraid it will produce an explanation with Mr Barton, who will, no doubt, avow. his passion, and solicit their consent to a connection which my foul abhors; for, my dearest Letty, it is not in my power to love Mr Barton, even if my heart was untouched by any other tenderness. Not that there is any thing difagreeable about his person, but there is a total want of that nameless charm which captivates and controuls the inchanted spirit-at least, he appears to me to have this defect; but if he had all the engaging qualifications which a man can possess. they would be excited in vain against that conflancy. which, I flatter myfelt, is the characteristic of my nature. No, my dear Willis, I may be involved in fresh troubles, and I believe I shall, from the importunities of this gentleman, and the violence of my relations; but my heart is incapable of change.

You know, I put no faith in dreams; and yet I have been much disturbed by one that visited me last night——— I thought I was in a church, where a certain person, whom you know, was on the point of being married to my aunt: that the clergymanwas Mr Barton, and that poor forson I stood weeping in a corner, half naked, and without shoes or stockings.———Now, I know there is nothing so childish as to be moved by those vain illusions; but, nevertheless, in spite of all my reason, this hath made a strong impression upon my mind, which begins to be very gloomy. Indeed, I have another more substantial cause of assistion———I have some religious scruples, my dear friend, which lie heavy on my conscience—I was persuaded to go to the Tabernacle, where I heard a discourse that affected me deeply. I have prayed fervently to be enlightened, but as yet I am not fenfible of these inward motions, those operations of grace, which are the figns of a regenerated spirit; and, therefore, I begin to be in terrible apprehensions about the state of my poor foul. Some of our family have had very uncommon accessions, particularly my aunt and Mrs Jenkins, who fometimes speak as if they were really inspired; so that I am not like to want for either exhortation or example, to purify my thoughts, and recall them from the vanities of this world, which, indeed, I would willingly refign, if it was in my power; but to make this facrifice, I must be enabled by such affistance from above as hath not yet been indulged to

LYDIA MELFORD.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR PHILLIPS,

HE moment I received your letter, I began to execute your commission—With the affistance of mine host at the Bull and Gate, I discovered the place to which your fugitive valet had retreated, and taxed him with his dishonesty—The fellow

I shall grow vain, upon your faying you find entertainment in my letters; barren, as they certainly are, of incident and importance, because your amusement must arise not from the matter, but from the manner, which you know is all my own ____ Animated, therefore, by the approbation of a person, whose nice taste and consummate judgment I can no longer doubt, I will cheerfully proceed with our memoirs - As it is determined we shall fet out next week for Yorkshire, I went to-day in the forenoon with my uncle to fee a carriage, belonging to a coachmaker in our neighbourhood --Turning down a narrow lane, behind Long-acre, we perceived a crowd of people standing at a door; which, it feems, opened into a kind of a Methodift meeting, and were informed, that a footman was then holding forth to the congregation within. Curious to fee this phenomenon, we squeezed into the place with much difficulty; and who should this preacher be, but the identical Humphry Clinker. He had finished his sermon, and given out a pfalm, the first stave of which he fung with peculiar graces .- But if we were aftonished.

I could hardly keep my gravity on this ludicrous occasion; but old Square-toes was differently affected -- The first thing that struck him, was the prefumption of his lackquer, whom he commanded to come down, with fuch an air of authority as Humphry did not think proper to difregard. He descended immediately, and all the people were in commo-Barton looked exceedingly sheepish, Lady Grifkin flirted her fan, Mrs Tabitha groaned in spirit, Liddy changed countenance, and Mrs Jenkins fobbed as if her heart was breaking-My uncle, with a fneer, asked pardon of the ladies for having interrupted their devotion, faying, he had particular business with the preacher, whom he ordered to call a hackneycoach. This being immediately brought up to the end of the lane, he handed Liddy inte, it, and my aunt and I following him, we drove home, without taking any further notice of the rest of the company, who ftill remained in filent aftonishment.

poor Liddy said she had no right to the title of a devotee; that she thought there was no harm in hearing a pious discourse, even if it came from a footman, especially as her aunt was present; but that if she had erred from ignorance, she hoped he would excuse it, as she could not bear the thoughts of living under his displeasure. The old gentleman, pressing her hand with a tender smile, said she was a good girl, and that he did not believe her capable of doing any thing that could give him the least umbrage or difguit.

When we arrived at our lodging, he commanded Mr Clinker to attend him up ftairs, and speke to him in these words--- "Since you are called upon "by the spirit to preach and to teach, it is high time "to lay afide the livery of an earthly mafter; and, " for my part, I am unworthy to have an apostle in " my fervice ____ " " I hope (faid Hum-" phry) I have not failed in my duty to your honour " ___ I should be a vile wretch if I did, confidering "the milery from which your charity and compassion " relieved me -- but having an inward admonition " of the spirit __ " " An admonition of the devil " --- cried the 'squire in a passion) What admoni-"tion, you blockhead? --- What right has fuch a "fellow as you to fet up for a reformer?" " Begging "your honour's pardon, (replied Clinker) may not " the new light of God's grace shine upon the poor " and the ignorant in their humility, as well as upon " the wealthy, and the philosopher in all his pride of "human learning?" "What you imagine to be "the new light of grace, (faid his mafter). I take to "be a deceitful vapour, glimmering through a crack "in your upper ftorey--- In a word, Mr Clinker, I " will have no light in my family but what pays the "king's taxes, unless it be the light of reason, which " you don't pretend to follow." " Ah

"Ah, Sir! (cried Humphry) the light of reafor " is no more, in comparison to the light I mean, " than a farthing candle to the fun at noon _____" "Very true, (faid uncle) the one would ferve to " thew you your way, and the other to dazzle and " confound your weak brain-Hark ye, Clinker, "you are either an hypocritical knave, or a wrong-" headed enthusiast; and, in either case, unsit for "my fervice _____ If you are a quack in fanctity and devotion, you will find it an eafy or matter to impose upon filly women, and others of " crazed understanding, who will contribute lavish-" ly for your support ---- if you are really se-"duced by the reveries of a difturbed imagina-" nation, the fooner you loofe your fenfes entirely, " the better for yourfelf and the community. "that case, some charitable person might provide "you with a dark room and clean straw in Bed-" lam, where it would not be in your power to in-" fect others, with your fanaticism; whereas, if " you bave jast reflection enough left to maintain " the character of a chosen vessel in the meetings " of the godly, you and your hearers will be mif-"led by a Will-i'the-wifp, from one error to an-" other, till you are plunged into religious frenzy; " and then, perhaps, you will hang yourfelf in de-" fpair ____ " " Which the Lord, of his infinite "mercy, forbid! (exclaimed the affrighted Clin-(ker.) It is very possible I may be under the "temptation of the devil, who wants to wreck " me on the rocks of spiritual pride___Your honour " fays, I am either a knave or a madman; now, as " I'll affure your honour I am no knave, it follows "that I must be mad; therefore, I beseech your " honour, upon my knees, to take my cafe into " confideration, that means may be used for my " recoverey ____' The

The 'squire could not help smiling at the poor sellow's simplicity, and promised to take care of him, provided he would mind the business of his place, without running after the new light of Methodism: but Mrs Tabitha took offence at his humility, which she interpreted into poorness of spirit and worldly mindedness—She upbraided him with the want of courage to suffer for conscience-sake: she observed, that if he should loose his place for bearing testimony of the truth, Providence would not fail to find him another, perhaps more advantageous; and, declaring that it could not be very agreeable to live in a family where an inquisition was established, retired to another room in great agitation.

My uncle followed her with a fignificant look ; then, turning to the preacher, "You hear what " my fifter fays-If you cannot live with me upon " fuch terms as I have prescribed, the vineyard of " Methodism lies before you, and she seems very. " well disposed to reward your labour."-" I would " not willingly give offence to any foul upon earth " (answered Humphry); her Ladyship has been " very good to me ever fince we came to London; " and furely the has a heart turned for religious ex-" ercifes, and both the and Lady Grifkin fing Pfalms " and hymns like two cherubims; but, at the fame time, I am bound to love and obey your honour. " ___It becometh not fuch a poor ignorant fellow " as me to hold dispute with gentlemen of rank and " learning .- As for the matter of knowledge, I. am no more than a beaft in comparison of your. " honour; therefore I fubmit; and, with God's er grace, I will follow you to the world's end if you don't think me too far gone to be out of confi :e -. " ment."

His master promised to keep him for some timelonger on trial; then desired to know in what manner

manner Lady Griskin and Mr Barton came to join their religious fociety. He told him, that her Ladyfhip was the person who first carried my aunt and fifter to the tabernacle, whither he attended them, and had his devotion kindled by Mr W___ preaching: that he was confirmed in this new way by the preacher's fermons, which he had bought and studied with great attention: that his discourse and prayers had brought over Mrs Jenkins; and the house-maid to the same way of thinking; but as for Mr Barton, he had never feen him at fervice before this day, when he came in company with Lady Grifkin -- Humphry moreover owned, that he had been encouraged to mount the nostrum by the example and fuccess of a weaver, who was much followed as a powerful minister: that, on his first trial, he found himfelf under fuch strong impulsions, as made him believe he was certainly moved by the spirit; and that he had affisted in Lady Grifkin's, and several private houses, at exercises of devotion.

Mr Bramble was no fooner informed that her Ladyship had acted as the primum mobile of this confederacy, than he concluded the had only made use of Clinker as a tool, subservient to the execution of some design, to the true secret of which he was an utter. ftranger-He observed that her Ladyship's brain was a perfect mill for projects; and that the and Tabby had certainly engaged in some secret treaty, the nature of which he could not comprehend. I told him. I thought it was no difficult matter to perceive the drift of Mrs Tabitha, which was to enfnare the heart of Barton, and that in all likelihood my Lady Grifkin acted as her auxiliary: that this supposition would account for their endeavours to convert him to Methodifin: an event which would occasion a connection of fouls that might be eafily improved into a matrimonial union.

My uncle feemed to be much diverted by the thoughts of this scheme's succeeding; but I gave him to understand, that Barton was pre-engaged: that he had the day before made a prefent of an etuis to Liddy. which her aunt had obliged her to receive, with a view, no doubt, to countenance her own accepting of a fnuff-box at the fame time: that my fifter having . made me acquainted with this incident, I had defired an explanation of Mr Barton, who declared his intentions were honourable, and expressed his hope that I would have no objections to his alliance: that I had thanked him for the honour he intended our family; but told him, it would be necessary to confult her uncle and aunt, who were her guardians, and their approbation being obtained, I could have no objection to his propofal; though I was persuaded that no violence would be offered to my fifter's inclinations, in a transaction that so nearly interested the happinels of her future life: that he had affured me, he should never think of availing himself of a guardians authority, unless he could render his addreffes agreeable to the young lady herfelf; and that he would immediately demand permission of Mr and Mrs Bramble to make Liddy a tender of his hand and fortune.

The 'squire was not insensible to the advantages of such a match, and declared he would promote it with all his influence; but when I took notice that there seemed to be an aversion on the side of Liddy, he said he would sound her on the subject; and, if her reluctance was such as would not be easily overcome, he would civilly decline the proposal of Mr Barton: for he thought, that in the choice of a husband, a young woman ought not to sacrifice the seelings of her heart for any consideration upon earth——"Liddy is not so desperation upon earth——"Liddy is not so desperate (said he) as to worship fortune at such an expense."

end in smoke; though there seems to be a storm brewing in the quarter of Mrs Tabby, who sat with all the sullen dignity of silence at dinner, seemingly pregnant with complaint and exposulation. As she hath certainly marked Barton for her own prey, she cannot possibly savour his suit to Liddy, and, therefore, I expect something extraordinary will attend his declaring himself my sister's admirer. This declaration will certainly be made in form, as soon as the lover can pick up resolution enough to stand the brunt of Mrs Tabby's disappointment; for he is without doubt, aware of her designs upon his person—

The particulars of the denovement you shall know in due season: mean while I am, always yours,

J. MELFORD.

To Dr LEWIS.

DEAR LEWIS,

 Then Mr Barton proceeded to this effect__ " I am, " indeed, extremely ambitious of being allied to your " family, Mr Bramble, and I hope you will fee no " cause to interpose your authority..." " As for au-" thority, (faid Tabby, interrupting him with fome "warmth) I know of none that he has a right to use "on this occasion—If I pay him the compliment of " making him acquainted with the step I intend to "take, it is all he can expect in reason. This is as " much as I believe he would do by me, if he intend-" ed to change his own fituation in life-In a word, "brother, I am so sensible of Mr Barton's extraor-"dinary merit, that I have been prevailed upon to al-" ter my resolution of living a fingle life, and to put " my happiness in his hands, by vesting him with " a legal title to my person and fortune, such as they " are. The business at present is to have the wri-" tings drawn; and I shall be obliged to you, if you " will recommend a lawyer to me for that purpose_."

You may guess what an effect this overture had upon me, who, from the information of my nephew, expected that Barton was to make a formal declaration of his paffion for Liddy; I could not help gazing in filent aftonishment, alternately at Tabby and her supposed admirer, which last hung his head in the most aukward confusion for a few minutes, and then retired, on pretence of being fuddenly feized with a vertigo. ____Mrs Tabitha affected much concern, and would have had him make use of a bed in the house; but he insisted upon going home, that he might have recourse to some drops, which he kept for fuch emergencies, and his inamorata acquiesced. _____ In the mean time I was exceedingly puzzled at this adventure, (though I suspected the truth) and did not know in what manner to demean myself towards Mrs Tabitha, when Jery came in and told me, he had just feen Mr

Mr Barton alight from his chariot at Lady Griskin's door.—This incident seemed to threaten a visit from her Ladyship, with which we were honoured accordingly, in less than half an hour—"I find (said she) "there has been a match of cross purposes among "you, good folks; and I'm come to set you to "rights—" So saying, she presented me with the following billet:

" Dear Sir,

"I no fooner recollected myself from the extreme confusion I was thrown into by that unlucky missingle of your sister, than I thought it my duty to affure you, that my devoirs to Mrs Bramble never exceeded the bounds of ordinary civility, and that my heart is unalterably fixed upon Miss Liddy Meltioned, as I had the honour to declare to her brother, when he questioned me upon that subject.—
"Lady Griskin has been so good as to charge herself, not only with the delivery of this note, but also with the task of undeceiving Mrs Bramble, for whom I have the most profound respect and venementation, though my affection being otherwise engaged, is no longer in the power of, Sir,

Having cast my eyes over this billet, I told her Ladyship that I would no longer retard the friendly office she had undertaken; and I and Jery forthwith retired into another room. There we soon preceived the conversation grow very warm betwixt the two ladies; and, at length, could distinctly hear certain terms of altercation, which we could no longer delay interrupting, with any regard to decerum. When we entered the scene of contention, we sound Liddy had joined the disputants, and flood trembling betwixt them, as if she had been afraid they would have proceeded to fomething more practical than words-Lady Grifkin's face was like the full moon in a ftorm of wind, glaring, fiery, and portentous; while Tabby looked grim and ghaftly, with an afpect breathing discord and dismay .___ Our appearance put a stop to their mutual revilings; but her ladyship turning to me, " Confin (faid ihe) "I can't help faying, I have met with a very un-" grateful return from this lady, for the pains I have "taken to ferve her family." —— "My family is much obliged to your ladyship, (cried Tabby " with a kind of hyfterical giggle) but we have no " right to the good offices of fuch an honourable go-"between." ____ "But, for all that, good M's "Tabitha Bramble, (refumed the other) I shall be " content with the reflection, that virtue is its " own reward; and it shall not be my fault, if you " continue to make yourfelf ridiculous _____ Mr " Bramble, who has no little interest of his own to " ferve, will, no doubt, contribute all in his power to "promote a match between Mr Barton and his niece. " which will be equally honourable and advantageous; and, I dare fay, Mifs Liddy herfelf will have " no objection to a measure fo well calculated to make "her happy in life."____" I beg your Ladyship's " pardon, (exclaimed Liddy, with great vivacity) I " have nothing but mifery to expect from fuch a mea-" fure; and I hope my guardians will have too much " compassion, to barter my peace of mind for any con-" fideration of interest or fortune." ___ " Up-" on my word, Mils Liddy! (faid fhe) you have pro-" fited by the example of your good aunt-I " comprehend your meaning, and will explain it when " I have a proper opportunity ____ In the mean " time, I shall take my leave - Madam, your most " obedient, and devoted humble fervant," faid the, Vol. I. advancing advancing close up to my sister, and curtiying so low, that I thought she intended to squat herself down on the floor—This salutation Tabby returned with equal solemnity; and the expression of the two saces, while they continued in this attitude, would be no bad subject for a pencil like that of the incomparable Hogarth, if any such should ever appear again, in these times of dulness and degeneracy.

Jery accompanied her ladyship to her house, that he might have an opportunity to restore the etuis to Barton, and advise him to give up his suit, which was so disagreeable to his sister; against whom, however, he returned much irritated——Lady Griskin had assured him, that Liddy's heart was pre-occupied; and immediately the idea of Wilson recurring to his imagination, his samily pride took the alarm——He denounced vengeance against that adventurer, and was disposed to be very peremptory with his sister; but I desired he would suppress his resentment, until I should have talked with her in private.

The poor girl, when I earnestly pressed her on this head, owned, with a flood of tears, that Wilfon had actually come to the Hot-Well at Briftol, and even introduced himfelf into our lodgings as a Tew pedlar; but that nothing had paffed betwixt them, further than her begging him to withdraw immediately, if he had any regard for her peace of mind: that he had disappeared accordingly, after having attempted to prevail upon my fifter's maid to deliver a letter, which, however, the refused to receive, though the had confented to carry a meffage, importing, that he was a gentleman of a good family, and that in a very little time, he would avow his passion in that character____She confessed, that although he had not kept his word in that particular he was not yet altogether indifferent to her affection; but folemnly promifed, she would never carry on any correspondence with him, or any other admirer, for the future, without the privity and approbation of her brother and me.

By this declaration, the made her own peace with Terv; but the hot headed boy is more than ever incenfed against Wilson, whom he now confiders as an imposter, that harbours some infamous defign upon the honour of his family ----- As for Barton, he was not a little mortified to find his prefent returned, and his addresses fo unfavourably received: but he is not a man to be deeply affected by fuch disappointments; and I know not whether he is not as well pleafed with being discarded by Liddy, as he would have been with a permission to prosecute his pretensions, at the risque of being every day, exposed to the revenge or machinations of Tabby, who is not to be flighted with impunity ____ I had not much time to moralize on these occurrences; for the house was visited by a conftable and his gang, with a warrant from Juffice Buzzard, to fearch the box of Humphry Clinker, my footman, who was just apprehended as a highwayman -This incident threw the whole family into confufion. My tifter fcolded the conftable for prefuming to enter the lodgings of a gentleman on fuch an errand, without having first asked and obtained permission; her maid was frightened into fits, and Liddy shed tears of compassion for the unfortunate Clinker, in whose box, however, nothing was found to confirm the fuspicion of robbery.

For my own part, I make no doubt of the fellow's being mistaken for some other person, and I went directly to the Justice, in order to procure his discharge; but there I sound the matter much more serious than I expected———Poor Clinker stood trembling at the bar, surrounded by thief takers; and, at a little distance, a thick, squat fellow, a postilion, his accuser, who had seized him in the street, and swore positively to his person, that the said Clinker had, on the 15th day of March last, on Black-heath, robbed a gentleman in a post-chaise, which he (the postilion) drove—This deposition was sufficient to justify his commitment; and he was sent accordingly to Clerkenwell prison, whither Jery accompanied him in the coach, in order to recommend him properly to the keeper, that he may want for no convenience which the place affords.

The spectators, who affembled to see this highwayman, were fagacious enough to differe femething very villainous in his aspect; which (begging their pardon) is the very picture of fimplicity; and the juffice himself put a very unfavourable construction upon tome of his answers, which, he faid, favoured of the an biguity and equivocation of an old offender; but in my opinion, it would have been more just and humane to impute them to the confusion into which we. may suppose a poor country lad to be thrown on such an occasion. I am flill perfuaded he is innocent; and in this persuasion. I can do no less than use my utmost endeavours that he may not be oppressed-I shall, tomorrow, fend my nephew to wait on the gentleman who was robbed, and beg he will have the huma-ity to go and fee the prisoner; that, in case he should find him quite different from the person of the highwayman, he may bear testimony in his behalf-Howfoever it my fare with Clinker, this curled affair will be to me productive of intolerable chagrin-I have already caught a dreadful cold, by ruthing into the open air from the justice's parlour, where I had been flewing in the crowd; and though I should not be laid up with the gout, as I believe I thall, I must fray at London for fome weeks, till this poor devil comes to his trial at Rochester; so that, in all probability, my Nothern expedition is blown up. IF

If you can find any thing in your philosophical budget, to confole me in the midth of these distresses and apprehensions, pray let it be communicated to

Your unfortunate friend,

London, June 12.

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxen.

DEAR WAT. HE farce is finished, and another piece of a graver cast brought upon the stage-Our aunt made a desperate attack upon Barton, who had no other way of faving himfelf, but by leaving her in poffession of the field, and avowing his pretensions to Liddy, by whom he has been rejected in his turn. Lady Grifkin acted as his advocate and agent on this occasion, with such zeal as embroiled her with Mrs Tabitha, and a high scene of altercation passed betwixt these two religionists, which might have come to action, had not my uncle interposed. They are, however, reconciled, in consequence of an event which hath involved us all in trouble and disquiet. You must know, the poor preacher, Humphry Clinker, is now exercifing his ministry among the felons in Clerkenwell prifon. A postilion having fworn a robbery against him, no bail could be taken, and he was committed to goal, notwithstanding all the remonstrances and interest my uncle could make in his behalf.

All things confidered, the poor fellow cannot poffibly be guilty, and yet, I believe, he runs some risque of being hanged - Upon his examination, he anfwered with fuch hefitation and referve, as perfuaded most of the people, who crowded the place, that he was really a knave, and the Justice's remarks, confirmed their opinion. Exclusive of my uncle and myfelf, there was only one person who seemed inclined in favour of the culprit.-He was a young man well dreffed, and from the manner in which he crossexamined the evidence, we took it for granted, that he was a student in one of the inns of court-He freely checked the Justice for some uncharitable inferences he made to the prejudice of the prisoner, and even ventured to dispute with his worship on certain points of law.

My uncle, provoked at the unconnected and dubious answers of Clinker, who seemed in danger of falling a facrifice to his own simplicity, exclaimed, "In "the name of God, if you are innocent, say so." "No, (cried he) God forbid that I should call myself "innocent, while my conscience is burdened "with sin." "What then, you did commit this "robbery?" resumed his master, "No, sure, "(said he) blessed be the Lord, I'm free of that

" guilt."

Here the Justice interposed, observing, that the man seemed inclined to make a discovery by turning Kings evidence and desired the clerk to take his confession; upon which Humphry declared, that he looked upon confession to be a popish fraud, invented by the whore of Babylon. The Templar affirmed, that the poor fellow was non compos; and exhorted the Justice to discharge him as a lunatic. "You know very well (added he) that the robustice in question was not committed by the pri"foner."

The thief takers grinned at one another; and Mr Justice Buzzard replied with great emotion, "Mr " Martin, I desire you will mind your own business; " I shall convince you one of these days that I under-" ftand mine." In short, there was no remedy; the mittimus was made out, and poor Clinker fent to prifon in a hackney-coach, guarded by the constable, and accompanied by your humble fervant. By the way, I was not a little furprifed to hear this retainer to juflice bid the prisoner to keep up his spirits, for that he did not doubt, but that he would get off for a few weeks confinement ----- He faid, his worthip knew very well that Clinker was innocent of the fact, and that the real highwayman, who robbed the chaife, was no other than that very individual Mr Martin, who had pleaded fo strenuously for honest Humphry.

Confounded at this information, I asked, "Why then is he suffered to go about at his liberty, and this poor innocent fellow treated as a malesactor? "We have exact intelligence of all Mr Martin's transactions; (said he) but as yet there is not evidence enough for his conviction; and as for this young man, the Justice could do no less than commit him, as the postilion swore point-blank to his identity." "So if this rascally postilion should persist in the falsity to which he has sworn, (said I) this innocent lad may be brought to the gal-

The constable observed, that he would have time enough to prepare for his trial, and might prove an alibi; or, perhaps, Martin might be apprehended and convicted for another fact; in which case, he might be prevailed upon to take this affair upon himself; or finally, if these chances should fail, and the evidence stand good against Clinker, the jury might recommend him to mercy, in confideration of his youth, especially if this should appear to be the first fact of which he had been guilty.

When I expressed my surprise, that the accuser should persist in charging Clinker, without taking the least notice of the real robber, who stood before him, and to whom, indeed, Humphry bore not the smallest refemblance; the conftable (who was himfelf a thief-taker,) gave me to understand, that Mr Martin was the best qualified for business of all the gentlemen on the road he had ever known; that he had always acted on his own bottom, without partner or correspondent, and never went to work but when he was cool and fober; that his courage and prefence of mind never failed him; that his address was genteel, and his behaviour void of all cruelty and infolence; that he never encumbered himself with watches or trinkets, nor even with bank-notes, but always dealt for ready money, and that in the current coin of the kingdom; and that he could difguife himself and his horse in such a manner, that, after the action, it was impossible to recognize either the one or the other --- "This great man (faid "he) has reigned paramount in all the roads within " fifty miles of London above fifteen months, and " has done more business in that time, than all " the

Shall-I own to you, that this portrait, drawn by a ruffian, hightened by what I myfelf had observed in his deportment, has interested me warmly in the fate of poor Martin, whom Nature feems to have intended for a useful and honourable member of that community upon which he now preys for subsistance? It feems he lived fome time as a clerk to a timber merchant, whose daughter Martin having privately married, was discarded, and his wife turned out of doors. She did not long furvive her marriage: and Martin, turning fortune-hunter, could not supply his occasions any other way, than by taking to the road, in which he has travelled hitherto with uncommon fuccess. He pays his respects regularly to Mr Justice Buzzard, the thief catcher-general of this metropolis, and fometimes they smoke a pipe together very lovingly, when the conversation generally turns upon the nature of evidence The justice has given him fair warning to take care of himfelf, and he has received his caution in good part .---Hitherto he has baffled all the vigilance, art, and activity of Buzzard and his emiffaries, with fuch conduct as would have done honour to the genius of a Cæsar or a Turenne; but he has one weakness, which has proved fatal to all the heroes of his tribe, namely, an indifcreet devotion to the fair fex, and, in all probability, he will be attacked on this defenceless quarter. Be

Be that as it may, I faw the body of poor Clinker configned to the gaoler of Clerkenwell, to whofe indulgence I recommended him fo effectually, that he received him in the most hospitable manner, though there was a necessity for equipping him with a fuit of irons, in which he made a very rueful arpearance. The poor creature feemed as much affected by my uncle's kindness, as by his own misfortune. When I affured him, that nothing should be left undone for procuring his enlargement, and making his confinement easy in the mean time, he fell down on his knees, and kiffing my hand, which he bathed with his tears, "O 'squire! (cried he, "fobbing) what shall I fay ?- I can't -- no, I can't " fpeak-my poor heart is bursting with gratitude "to you and my dear-dear-generousnoble benefactor."

I protest, the scene became so pathetic, that I was fain to force mylelf away, and returned to my uncle, who fent me in the afternoon with a compliment to one Mr Mead, the perion who had been robbed on Blackheath. As I did not find him at home, I left a meffage, in consequence of which he called at our lodgings this morning, and very humanely agreed to visit the prisoner. By this time Lady Griskin had come to make her formal compliments of condolance to Mrs Tabitha, on this domestic calamity: and that prudent maiden, whose passion was now cooled, thought proper to receive her ladyship so civilly, that a reconciliation immediately enfued. ladies refolved to comfort the poor prisoner in their own persons, and Mr Mead and I 'squired them to Clerkenwell, my uncle being detained at home by fome flight complaints in his stomach and bowels.

The turnkey, who received us at Clerkenwell, looked remarkably fullen; and when we enquired for Clinker, " I don't care if the devil had him; (faid " he) here has been nothing but canting and pray-"ing fince the fellow entered the place-Rabbit " him! the tap will be ruined -we han't fold " a cask of beer, nor a dozen of wine, fince he paid " his garnish ___ the gentlemen get drunk with no-"thing but your damned religion For my " part, I believe as how your man deals with the " devil. Two or three as bold hearts as ever took " the air upon Hounflow, have been blubbering all " night; and if the fellow an't speedily removed by "Habeas Corpus, or otherwise, I'll be damn'd if "there's a grain of true spirit left within these " walls --- we shan't have a foul to do credit to the oplace, or to make his exit like a true born English-" man-damn my eyes! there will be nothing but " fnivelling in the cart—we shall all die like so " many pfalm-finging weavers."

In short, we found that Humphry was, at that very instant, haranguing the felons in the chapel; and that the gaoler's wife and daughter together with my aunt's woman, Winifred Jenkins, and our house-maid, were among their audience, which we immediately joined. I never faw any thing fo ftrongly picturefque as this congregation of felons clanking their chains, in the midft of whom stood orator Clinker, expatiating, in a transport of fervour, on the torments of hell, denounced in fcripture against evil-doers, comprehending murderers, robbers, thieves, and whoremongers. The variety of attention exhibited in the faces of those ragamuffins, formed a groupe that would not have difgraced the pencil of a Raphael. In one it denoted admiration; in another, doubt; in a third, difdain; in a fourth, contempt; in a fifth, terror; in a fixth, derifion; and in a feventh, indignation.

As for Mrs Winifred Jenkins, she was in tears overwhelmed with forrow; but whether for her own fins, or the misfortune of Clinker, I cannot pretend to fay. The other females seemed to listen with a mixture of wonder and devotion. The gaoler's wife declared he was a faint in trouble, saying, she wished from her heart, there was such another good soul, like him, in every gaol in England.

Mr Mead, having earnestly surveyed the preacher, declared his appearance was fo different from that of the person who robbed him on Blackheath, that he could freely make oath he was not the man; But Humphry himself was by this time pretty well rid of all apprehensions of being hanged; for he had been the night before folemnly tried and acquitted by his fellow prisoners, some of whom he had already con. verted to Methodism. He now made proper acknowledgements for the honour of our vifit, and was permitted to kiss the hands of the ladies, who affured him, he might depend upon their friendship and protection. Lady Griskin, in her great zeal, exhorted his fellow-prisoners to profit by the precious opportunity of having fuch a faint in bonds among them, and turn over a new leaf for the benefit of their poor fouls; and, that her admonition might have the greater effect, the reinforced it with her bounty.

While she and Mrs Tabby returned in the coach with the two maid-servants, I waited on Mr Mead to the house of justice Buzzard, who, having heard his declaration, said, his oath could be of no use at present, but that it would be a material evidence for the prisoner at his trial; so that there seems to be no remedy but patience for poor Clinker; and, indeed, the same virtue, or medicine, will be necessary for us all, the squire in particular, particular, who had fet his heart upon his excursion to the northward.

While we were visiting honest Humphry in Clerkenwell prison, my uncle received a much more extraordinary visit at his own lodgings. Mr Martin, of whom I have made fuch honourable mention defired permission to pay him his reipects, and was admitted accordingly. He told him that having observed him, at Mr Buzzard's, a good deal disturbed by what had happened to his fervant, he had come to affure him he had nothing to apprehend for Clinker's life; for, if it was possible that any jury could find him guilty upon fuch evidence, he, Martin himfelf, would produce in court a perfon, whose deposion would bring him off clear as the fun at noon. Sure, the fellow would not be fo romantic as to take the robbery upon himself! He faid the postillion was an infamous fellow, who had been a dabbler in the fame profession, and faved his life at the Old Bailey by impeaching his companions; that being now reduced to great poverty, he had made this desperate push, to swear away the life of an innocent man, in hopes of having the reward upon his conviction; but that he would find himfelf miferably disappointed, for the Justice and his myrmidons were determined, to admit of no interloper in this branch of business; and that he did not at all doubt, but that he would find matter enough to ftop the evidence himfelf before the next gaoldelivery. He affirmed, that all these circumstances were well known to the Justice; and that his feverity to Clinker, was no other than a hint to his mafter to make him a prefent in private, as an acknowledgement of his candour and humanity.

This hint, however, was so unpalatable to Mr Bramble, that he declared, with great warmth, he would rather confine himself for life to London, Vol. I. T which which he detested, than be at liberty to leave it tomorrow, in consequence of encouraging corruption in a magistrate. Hearing, however, how savourable Mr Mead's report had been for the prisoner, he is resolved to take the advice of counsel in what manner to proceed for his immediate enlargement. I make no doubt, but that in a day or two this troublesome business may be discussed; and in this hope we are preparing for our journey. If our endeavours do not miscarry, we shall have taken the field before you hear again from

To Dr LEWIS.

THANK Heaven! dear Lewis, the clouds are difperfed, and I have now the clearest prospect of my fummer campaign, which, I hope, shall be able to begin to-morrow. I took the advice of counsel, with the respect to the case of Clinker, in whose sayour a lucky incident has intervened. The fellow who accused him, has had his own battery turned upon himfelf .- Two days ago, he was apprehended for a robbery on the highway, and committed on the evidence of an accomplice.-Clinker, having moved for a writ of babeas corpus, was brought before the lord chief juffice, who, in confequence of an affidavit of the gentleman who had been robbed, importing that he the faid Clinker was not the person who stopped him on the high way, as well as in confideration of the postillion's character and present circumstances.

was pleased to order that my servant should be admitted to bail; and he has been discharged accordingly, to the unspeakable satisfaction of our whole family, to which he has recommended himself in an extraordinary manner, not only by his obliging deportment, but by his talents of preaching, praying, and singing psalms, which he has exercised with such effect, that even Tabby respects him as a chosen vessel. If there was any thing like affectation or hypocrisy in this excess of religion, I would not keep him in my service; but, so far as I can observe, the fellow's character is downright simplicity, warmed with a kind of enthusiasm, which renders him very susceptible of gratitude and attachment to his benefactors.

As he is an excellent horseman, and understands farriery, I have bought a stout gelding for his use, that he may attend us on the road, and have an eye to our eattle, in case the coachman should not mind his business. My nephew, who is to ride his own saddle-horse, has taken, upon trial, a servant just come from abroad with his former master, Sir William Strollop, who vouches for his honesty. The fellow, whole name is Dutton, seems to be a petit-maitre——He has got a smattering of French bows, and grins, and shrugs, and takes sauff a la mode de France, but values himself chiesty upon his skill and dexterity in hair-dressing—If I am not much deceived by appearance, he is, in all respects, the very contrast of Humphry Clinker.

My fifter has made up matters with Lady Griskin, though, I must own, I should not have been forry to see that connection entirely destroyed; but Tabby is not of a disposition to forgive Barton, who, I understand, is gone to his seat in Berkshire for the summer season. I cannot help suspecting, that in the treaty of peace, which has been lately ratified betwixt those two semales, it is stipulated, that her Ladyship shall use her best endeavours to provide an agreeable help-mate for our fifter Tabitha, who seems to be quite desperate in matrimonial designs. Perhaps, the match-maker is to have a valuable consideration in the way of brokerage, which she will most certainly deserve, if she can find any man in his senses, who will yoke with Mrs Bramble from motives of affection or interest.

I find my fpirits and my health affect each other reciprocally—that is to fay, every thing that discomposes my mind, produces a correspondent disorder in niv body; and my bodily complaints are remarkably mitigated by those considerations that diffipate the clouds of mental chagrin-The imprisonment of Clinker brought on those symptoms which I mentioned in my lait, and now they are vanished at discharge-It must be owned, indeed, I took some of the tincture of ginfeng, prepared according to your prescription, and found it exceedingly grateful to the flomach; but the pain and fickness continued to return, after short intervals till the anxiety of my mind was entirely removed, and then I found myself persectly at ease. We have had fair weather these ten days, to the astonishment of the Londoners, who think it portentous. you enjoy the same indulgence in Wales, I hope Barns has got my hay made, and fafe cocked, by this As we shall be in motion for some weeks, I cannot expect to hear from you as usual; but I shall continue to write from every place at which we make any halt, that you may know our tract, in cafe it should be necffary to communicate any thing to

To Mrs MARY JONES, at Brambleton, hall.

DEAR MARY. HAVING the occasion of my cousin, Jenkins of Aberga'ny, I fend you, as a token; a turkey shell comb, a kiple of yards of green ribbon, and a farment upon the nothingnels of good works, which was preached in the Tabernacle; and you will also receive a horn-buck for Saul, whereby the may learn her letters; for I'm much concerned about the flate of her poor fole - and what are all the purfuits of this life to the confarns of that immortal part ?- What is life but a veil of affliction? ___ O Mary! the whole family have been in such a constipation !- Mr Clinker has been in trouble, but the gates of hell have not been able to prevail against him --- His virtue is like poor gould, feven times tried in the fire. He was tuck u) for a robbery, and had before gustass Butshard, who made his mittamouse; and the pore youth was fent to prison upon the false oas of a willian, that wanted to fwear his life away for the looker of cain.

The 'fquire did all in his power, but could not prevent his being put in chains, and confined among common manufactors, where he flud like an innotheep in the midft of wolves and tygers. cent -Lord knows what mought have happened to this pyehouse young man, if master had not applied to Apias Korkus, who lives with the ould builiff, and, is, they fay, five hundred yeas ould (God bless us!) and a congeror: but, if he be. fure I am he don't deal with the devil, otherwife he wouldn't have fought out Mr Clinker, as he did, in spite of stone wal's, iron bolts, and double locks, that flew open at his command: for Ould Scratch has not a greater enemy upon hearth than T 3 Mr

Mr Clinker, who is, indeed a very powerful labourer in the Lord's vineyard. I do no more than use the words of my good lady, who has got the intectual cailing; and I trust, that even myself, though unwhorthy, shall find greafe to be excepted-Mifs Liddy has been touched to the quick, but is a little timorfome: howsomever, I make no doubt, but she and all of us, will be brought, by the endeavours of Mr Clinker, to produce bleffed fruit of generation and repentance. ---- As for mafter and the young 'fquire, they have as yet had narrow glimfe of the new light -I doubt as how their hearts are hardened by worldly wifdom, which, as the pyebil faith, is foolishness in the fight of God.

O Mary Jones, pray without feizing for greafe to prepare you for the operations of this wonderful inftrument, which, I hope, will be exorcifed this winter upon you and others at Brambleton-hall.—To morrow, we are to fet out in a cox and four for Yorkshire; and, I believe, we shall travel that way far, and far, and farther than I can tell; but I shan't go so far as to forget my friends; and Mary Jones will always be remembered as one of them by her

To Mrs GWILLIM, House-keeper, at Brambleton-ball.

MRS GWILLIM,

I CAN'T help thinking it very strange, that I never had an answer to the letter I wrote you some weeks ago from Bath, concerning the four beer, the gander, and the maids eating butter, which I won't allow allow to be wasted—We are now going upon a long gurney to the North, whereby I desire you will redouble your care and circumflexion, that the family may be well managed in our absence; for, you know, you must render accunt, not only to your earthly master, but also to him that is above: and if you are found a good and faithful servant, great will be your reward in haven. I hope there will be twenty stun of cheese ready for market by the time I get huom, and as much owl spun, as will make half a dozen pair of blankets; and that the savings of the butter-milk will fetch me a good penny before Martinmass, as the two pigs are to be fed for baking with bitchmass and acrons.

i wrote to doctor Lewis for the same porpus, but he never had the good manners to take the least notice of my letter; for which reason, I shall never fayour him with another, though he beshits me on his bended knees. You will do well to keep a watchful eye over the hind Villiams; who is one of his amiffories, and, I believe, no better than he should be at bottom. God forbid that I should lack Christian charity; but charity begins at huom, and fure nothing can be a more charitable work than to rid the family of fuch vermin. I do suppose, that the brindled cow has been had to the parson's bull, that old Moll has had another litter of pigs, and that Dick is become a mighty moufer. Pray order every thing for the beft, and be frugal, and keep the maids to their labour-It I had a private opportunity, I would fend them fome hymns to fing instead of profane ballads; but, as I can't, they and you must be contented with the prayers of,

T. BRAMBLE.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR PHILLIPS,

THE very day after I wrote my last, Clinker was fet at liberty——As Martin had foretold, the accuser was himself committed for a robbery, upon unquestionable evidence. He had been for some time in the fnares of the thief-taking fociety; who, refenting his prefumption in attempting to incroach upon their monopoly of impeachment, had him taken up and committed to Newgate, on the deposition of an accomplice, who has been admitted as evidence for the king. The postilion being upon record as an old offender, the chief Justice made no scruple of admitting Clinker to bail, when he perused the affidavit of Mr Mead, importing that the faid Clinker was not the person that robbed him on Blackheath; and honest Humphry was discharged-When he came home, he expressed great eagerness to pay his respects to his master, and here his elocution failed him, but his filence was pathetic; he fell down at his feet, and embraced his knees, shedding a flood of tears, which my uncle did not fee with-He took fouff with fome conout emotionfusion; and putting his hand in his pocket, gave himhis bleffing in fomething more substantial than words " Clinker, (faid he) I am so well conse vinced, both of your honesty and courage, that I " am refolved to make you my life-guard-man on the "highway.

He was accordingly provided with a case of pistols, and a carbine to be flung across his shoulders: and every other preparation being made, we set out last Thursday, at seven in the morning; my uncle, with the three women in the coach; Humphry, well mounted mounted on a black gelding bought for his use; my-felf a-horseback, attended by my new valet, Mr Dutton, an exceeding coxcomb, fresh from his travels, whom I have taken upon trial—The fellow wears a solitaire, uses paint, and takes rappee with all the grimace of a French marquis. At present, however, he is in a riding-dress, jack-boots, leather breeches, a scarlet waistcoat, with gold binding, a laced hat, a hanger, a French posting-whip, in his hand, and his hair en queue,

Before we had gone nine miles, my horse lost of his shoes; so that I was to ftop at Barnet to have another, while the coach proceeded at an easy pace over the common. About a mile fhort of Hatfield, the postillions, stopping the carriage, gave notice to Clinker that there were two fuspicious fellows a-horseback, at the end of a lane, who feemed waiting to attack the coach. Humphry forthwith apprifed my uncle, declaring he would stand by him to the last drop of his blood; and, unflinging his carbine, prepared for action. The 'squire had pistols in the pockets of the coach, and refolved to make use of them directly; but he was effectually prevented by his female companions, who flung themselves about his neck, and screamed in At that inftant, who should concert. come up at a hand-gallop, but Martin the highwayman, who, advancing to the coach, begged the ladies would compose themselves for a moment; then, defiring Clinker to follow him to the charge, he pulled a piftol out of his bosom, and they rode up together to give battle to the rogues, who, having fired at a great diftance, fled across the com-They were in pursuit of the fugitives when I came up, not a little alarmed at the shrieks in the coach, when I found my uncle in a violent rage, without his periwig, ftruggling to difentangle himfelf himself from Tabby and the other two, and swearing with great vociferation. Before I had time to interpose, Martin and Clinker returned from the pursuit, and the former paid his compliments with great politeness, giving us to understand, that the fellows had scampered off, and that he believed they were a couple of raw prentices from London. He commended Clinker for his courage, and said, if we would give him leave, he would have the honour to accompany us as far as Stevenage, where he had some business.

The 'squire having recollected and adjusted himself. was the first to laugh at his own situation; but it was not without difficulty that Tabby's arms could be untwifted from his neck, Liddy's teeth chattered, and Jenkins was threatened with a fit as usual. I had communicated to my uncle the character of Martin, as it was described by the constable, and he was much ftruck with its fingularity-He could not suppose the fellow had any defign on our company, which was fo numerous and well armed; he, therefore, thanked him, for the fervice he had just done them, faid he would be glad of his company, and asked himto dire with us at Hatfield. This invitation might not have been agreeable to the ladies, had they known the real profession of our guest, but this was a secret to all except my uncle and myfelf Mrs Tabitha however would by no means confent to proceed with a cafe of loaded piftols in the coach, and they were forthwith discharged in complaisance to her and the rest of the women.

Being gratified in this particular, she became remarkably good humoured, and at dinner behaved in the most affable manner to Mr Martin, with whose polite address, and agreeable conversation she seemed to be much taken. After dinner, the landlord accossing me in the yard asked, with a fignificant Before we left Hatfield, my uncle, fixing his eyes on Martin with fuch expression as is more eafily conceived than described, asked, if he often travelled that road? and he replied with a look which denoted his understanding the question, that he very feldom did business in that part of the country. In a word, this adventurer favoured us with his company to the neighbourhood of Stevenage, where he took his leave of the coach and me in very polite terms, and turned off upon a cross-road, that led to a village on the left. At supper, Mrs Tabby was very full in the praise of Mr Martin's good sense and good breeding, and feemed to-regret that the had not a further opportunity to make some experiment upon his affection. In the morning, my uncle was not a little furprised to receive, from the waiter, a billet couched in these words:

" SIR,

[&]quot;I could easily perceive from your looks, when "I had the honour to converse with you at Hatsheld, that my character is not unknown to you; and,

"and, I dare fay, you won't think it strange, that I should be glad to change my present way of "life, for any other honest occupation, let it be e ever so humbie, that will afford me bread in mo-" deration, and fleep in fafety. --- Perhaps you may sthink I flatter, when I fay, that from the moment "I was witness to your generous concern in the c' cause of your servant, I conceived a particular " esteem and veneration for your person; and yet " what I fay is true. I should think myfelf happy "if I could be admitted into your protection " and fervice, as house-steward, clerk, butler, or c bailiff, for either of which places I think myself tolerably well qualified; and, fure I am, I should " not be found deficient in gratitude and fidelity: " at the same time, I am very fensible how much "you must deviate from the common maxims of " discretion, even in putting my professions to the " trial; but I don't look upon you as a person that "thinks in the ordinary stile; and the delicacy of " my fituation will, I know, justify this address to a heart warmed with beneficence and compaffion. "-Understanding you are going pretty far north, "I shall take an opportunity to throw myself in "your way again, before you reach the borders of " Scotland; and, I hope, by that time, you will have " taken into confideration the truly diftressful case " of.

" Honoured Sir,
" Your very humble,
" And devoted fervant,
" EDWARD MARTIN."

The 'squire, having perused this letter, put it into my hand, without saying a syllable; and, when I had read it, we looked at each other in silence. From a certain sparkling in his eyes, I discovered there was more in his heart, than he cared to express with his tongue, in favour of poor Martin; and this was precifely my own feeling, which he did not fail to difcern, by the same means of communication-" What shall we do (faid he) to fave this poor " finner from the gallows, and make him a useful mem-" ber of the common-wealth? and yet the proverb " fays, Save a thief from the gallows, and he'll cut "your throat." I told him, I really believed Martin was capable of giving the proverb the lie; and that I should heartily concur in any step he might take in favour of his folicitation. We mutually refolved to deliberate upon the subject, and, in the mean time, proceeded on our journey. The roads having been broke up by the heavy rains in the fpring, were fo rough, that although we travelled very flowly, the jolting occasioned such pain to my uncle, that he was become exceedingly peevish when we arrived at this place, which lies about eight miles from the post-road, between Weatherby and Boroughbridge.

Harrigate water, so celebrated for its efficacy in the fcurvy and other diftempers, is supplied from a copious fpring, in the hollow of a wild common, round which, a good many houses have been built for the convenience of the drinkers, though few of them are inhabited. Most of the company lodge at some distance, in five separate inns, situated in different parts of the common, from whence they go every morning to the well, in their own carria-The lodgers of each inn form a distinct fociety that eat together; and there is a commodious public room, where they breakfast in dishabille, at separate tables, from eight o'clock till eleven, as they chance or chuse to come in-Here also they drink tea in the afternoon, and play at cards, or dance in the evening One custom, however, prevails, which I look upon as a folecism in Vol. I. H. politenets. politeness.—The ladies treat, with tea in their turns; and even girls of fixteen are not exempted from this shameful imposition—There is a public ball by subscription every night at one of the houses, to which all the company from the others are admitted by tickets; and, indeed, Harrigate treads upon the heels of Bath, in the articles of gaiety and dissipation—with this difference, however, that here we are more sociable and familiar. One of the inns is already full up to the very garrets, having no less than fifty lodgers, and as many servants. Our family does not exceed thirty fix; and I should be sorry to see the number augmented, as our accommodations won't admit of much increase.

At present, the company is more agreeable than one could expect from an accidental affemblage of perfons, who are utter ftrangers to one another-There feems to be a general disposition among us to maintain good fellowship, and promote the purposes of humanity, in favour of those who come hither on the fcore of health. I fee feveral faces which we left at Bath, although the majority are of the northren countries, and many come from Scotland for the benefit of these waters ____ In such a variety, there must be some originals, among whom Mrs Tabitha Bramble is not the most inconsiderable—No place where there is fuch an intercourfe between the fexes, can be disagreeable to a lady of her views and temperament __ She has had fome warm disputes at table, with a lame parson from Northumberland; on the new birth, and the infignificance of moral virtue, and her arguments have been reinforced by an old Scots lawyer, in a tye-periwig, who, though he has loft his teeth, and the use of his limbs, can still wag his tongue with great volubility. He has paid her fuch fulfome compliments, upon her piety and learning, as feem to have won her heart; and the, in her burn, treats him with fuch attention as indicate a defign fign upon his person; but, by all accounts, he is too much a fox to be inveigled into any snare that she can lay for his affection.

We do not propose to stay long at Harrigate, though, at present, it is our head quarters, from whence we shall make some excursions, to visit two or three of our rich relations, who are settled in this county. Pray remember me to all our friends of Jesus, and allow me to be still Yours affectionately, I. Melford.

Harrigate, June 23.

To Dr. LEWIS.

DEAR DOCTOR. ONSIDERING the tax we pay for turnpikes, the A roads of this country constitute a most intolerable grievance. Between Newark and Weatherby, I have fuffered more from jolting and fwinging, than ever I felt in the whole course of my life, although the carriage is remarkably commodious and well hung, and the postilions were very careful in driving. I am now fafely housed at the New Inn at Harrigate, whither I came to fatisfy my curiolity. rather than with any view of advantage to my health; and, truly, after having confidered all the parts and particulars of the place, I cannot account for the concourse of people one finds here, upon any other principle but that of caprice, which feems to be the character of our nation.

Harrigate is a wild common, bare and bleak, without tree or shrub, or the least signs of cultivation; and the people who came to drink the water, are crowded together in paultry inns, where the few tolerable rooms are monopolized by the friends and favourites of the house, and all the rest of the lodgers are obliged to put up with dirty holes, where there is neither space, air, nor convenience. My apartment is about ten feet square; and when the folding-beds is down, there is just room sufficient to pass between it and the fire. One might expect, indeed, that there would be no occasion for a fire at midsummer; but here the climate is so backward, that an ash tree, which our landlord has planted before my window, is just beginning to put forth its leaves; and I am fain to have my bed warmed every night.

As for the water, which is faid to have effected fo many furprising cures, I have drank it once, and the first draught has cured me of all defire to repeat the medicine .- Some people fay it smells of rotten eggs. and others compare it to the scourings of a foul gun. -It is generally supposed to be strongly impregnated with fulphur; and Dr Shaw, in his book upon mineral waters, fays, he has feen flakes of fulphur floating in the well-Pace tanti viri; I, for my part, have neither observed any thing like fulphur, either in or about the well, neither do I find that any brimstone has ever been extracted from the water. As for the fmell, if I may be allowed to judge from my own organs, it is exactly that of bilge water; and the faline tafte of it feems to declare, that it is nothing elfe than falt water purified in the bowels of the earth. I was obliged to hold my nose with one hand, while I advanced the glass to my mouth with the other; and after I had made thift to fwallow it, my flomach could hardly retain what it had received-The only effects it produced were fickness, griping, and infurmountable difgust—I can hardly mention it without puking——The world is strangely missed by the affectation of fingularity. I cannot help suspecting, that this water owes its reputation in a great measure to its being fo strikingly offensive On the same kind of analogy, a German doctor has has introduced hemlock and other poisons, as specifics, into the materia medica——I am persuaded, that all the cures ascribed to the Harrigate water would have been as efficaciously, and infinitely more agreeably performed, by the internal and external use of seawater. Sure I am, this last is much less niuseous to the taste and smell, and much more gentle in its operation as a purge, as well as more extensive in its medical qualities.

Two days ago, we went across the country to visit 'squire Burdock, who married a first cousin of my father's, an heirefs, who brought him an estate of a thousand a year. This gentleman is a declared opponent of the ministry in parliament; and having an opulent fortune, piques himfelf upon living in the country, and maintaining old English bospitality ---- By the bye, this is a phrase very much used by the English themselves, both in words and writing; but I never heard of it out of the Island, except by way of irony and farcasm. What the hospitality of our forefathers has been I should be glad to see recorded, rather in the memoirs of frangers who have vifited our country, and were the proper objects and judges of fuch hospitality, than in the discourse and lucubrations of the modern English, who seem to describe it from theory and conjecture. Certain it is, we are generally looked upon by foreigners, as a people totally destitute of this virtue; and I never was in any country abroad, where I did not meet with persons of distinction who complained of having been inhospitably used in Great-Britain. A gentleman of France, Italy, or Germany, who has entertained and lodged an Englishman at his house, when he afterwards meets with his guest at London, is asked to dinner at the Saracen's head, the Turk'shead, the Boar's head, or the Bear, eats raw beef and butter, drinks execrable port, and is allowed to pay his share of the reckoning. .

But, to return from this digression, which my feeling, for the honour of my country, obliged me to make ___our Yorkshire cousin has been a mighty fox-hunter before the Lord; but now he is too fat and unweildly to leap ditches and five-bar gates; neverthelefs, he still keeps a pack of hounds, which are well exercifed; and his huntiman every night entertains him with the adventure of the day's chafe, which he recites in a tone and terms that are extremely curious and fignificant. In the mean time, his broad brawn is scratched by one of his grooms-This fellow, it feems, having no inclination to curry any beaft out of the stable, was at great pains to scollop his nails in fuch a manner that the blood followed at every stroke-He was in hopes that he would be difinisfied from this difagreable office, but the event turned out contrary to his expectation.—His mafter declared he was the best scratcher in the family; and now he will not fuffer any other fervant to draw a nail upon his carcafe.

to shake off her yoke. - She, therefore, acquiesces in the proofs he daily gives of his attatchment to the liberty of an English freeholder, by faying and doing at his own table, whatever gratifies the brutality of his disposition, or contributes to the ease of his perfon. The house, though large, is neither elegant nor comfortable.-It looks like a great inn, crowded with travellers, who dine at the landlord's ordinary, where there is a great profusion of victuals and drink, but mine hoft feems to be misplaced; and I would rather dine upon filberts with a hermit, than feed upon venison with a hog. The footmen might be aptly compared to the waiters of a tavern, if they were more ferviceable and less rapacious; but they are generally infolent and inattentive, and fo greedy, that, I think, I can dine better, and for less expence, at the Star and Garter in Pall-mall, than at our cousins castle in Yorkshire. The 'squire is not only accommodated with a wife, but he is also bleffed with an only fon, about two and twenty, just returned from Italy, a complete fidler and dillettante; and he flips no opportunity of manifesting the most perfect contempt for his own father.

When we arrived, there was a family of foreigners at the house, on a visit to this virtuoso, with whom they had been acquainted at the Spa; it was the count de Melville, with his lady, on their way to Scotland. Mr Burdock had met with an accident, in consequence of which both the count and I would have retired, but the young gentleman and his mother insisted upon our staying dinner; and their serenity seemed to be so little russed by what had happened, that we complied with their invitation. The 'squire had been brought home over night in his post-chaise, so terribly belaboured about the pate, that he seemed to be in a state of stupefaction, and had ever since remained speechless. A country apothecary called Grieve, who lived in a neighbouring village, having been called to his affistance, had let him blood, and applied a poultice to his head, declaring, that he had no fever, nor any other bad symptom but the loss of fpeech, if he had really loft that faculty. But the young 'squire said this practitioner was an ignorantaccio, that there was a fracture in cranium, and that there was a necessity for having him trepanned without loss of time. His mother, espousing this opinion, had an express sent to York for a surgeon to perform the operation, and he has already come with his 'prentice and instruments. Having examined the patient's head, he began to prepare his dreffings; though Grieve still retained his first opinion that there was no fracture, and was the more confirmed in it as the 'fquire had paffed the night in profound fleep, uninterrupted by any catching or convulsion. The York furgeon faid he could not tell whether there was a fracture, until he should take off the scalp; but, at any rate, the operation might be of fervice, in giving vent to any blood that might be extravasated either above or below the dura mater. The lady and her fon were clear for trying the experiment; and Grieve was dismissed with some marks of contempt, which, perhaps, he owed to the plainness of his appearance. He seemed to be about the middle age, wore his own black hair without any fort of dreffing; by his garb, one would have taken him for a quaker, but he had none of the stiffnels of that feet, on the contrary, he was very submissive, respectful, and remarkably taciturn.

Leaving the ladies in an apartment by themfelves, we adjourned to the patient's chamber, where the dreffings and instruments were displayed, in order upon a pewter dish. The operator, laying aside his coat and periwig, equipped himself with a night-cap, apron, and fleeves, while his 'prentice and footman, feizing the 'fquire's head, began to place what followed _____ The patient, bolting upright in the bed, collared each of these affistants with the grasp of Hercules, exclaiming, in a bellowing tone, "I ha'n't lived so long in Yorkshire to be " trepanned by fuch vermin as you;" and leaping on the floor, put on his breeches quietly, to the aftonishment of us all. The furgeon still infisted upon the operation, alledging it was now plain that the brain was injured, and defiring the fervants to put him into bed again; but nobody would venture to execute his orders, or even to interpole: when the 'squire turned him and his affistants out of doors, and threw his apparatus out at the window. Having thus afferted his prerogative, and put on his clothes with the help of a valet, the count, with my nephew and me, were introduced by his fon, and received with his usual stile of rustic civility; then turning to fignor Macaroni, with a farcastic grin, "I tell " thee what, Dick, (laid he) a man's scull is not to be bored every time his head is broken; and I'll " convince thee and thy mother, that I know as " many tricks as e'er, an old fox in the West Ri-" ding."

We afterwards understood he had quarrelled at a public house with an exciseman, whom he challenged to a bout at single-stick, in which he had been worsted; and that the shame of this deseat had tied up his tongue. As for madam, she had shewn no concern for his disaster, and now heard of his recovery without emotion————She had taken some I tile notice of my sister, and niece, though rather with a view to include her own petulance, than out of any fentiment of regard to our family; - She faid Liddy was a fright, and ordered her woman to adjust her head before dinner; but she would not meddle with Tabby, whose spirit, she soon perceived, was not to be irritated with impunity. table she acknowledged me fo far as to fay she had heard of my father; though she hinted, that he had disobliged her family, by making a poor match in Wales. She was difagreably familiar in her inquiries about our circumstances; and asked, if I intended to bring up my nephew to the law. I told her, that, as he had an independant fortune, he would follow no profession but that of a country gentleman; and that I was not without hopes of procuring for him a feat in parliament .- Pray, cousin, (faid she) " what may his fortune be?" When I answered that with what I should be able to give him, he would have better than two thousand a year, she replied, with a disdainful tofs of her head, that it would be impossible for him to preserve his independence on fuch a paltry provision.

Not a little nettled at this arrogant remark, I told her; I had the honour to fit in parliament with her father, when he had little more than half that income; and I believed there was not a more independent and incorruptible member in the house. "Ay; but times are changed, (cried the "'fquire-----Country gentlemen now-a-days " stands me in a cool thousand a quarter, though "I raife my own stock, import my own liquors, and " have every thing at the first hand_____True " it is, I keep open house, and receive all comers, " for the honour of Old England." " If that " be the cafe, (faid I) 'tis a wonder you can main-" tain it at fo small an expence; but every private gentleman is not expected to keep a caravansera

"for the accommodation of travellers: indeed, if every individual lived in the fame stile, you would not have such a number of guests at your table; of consequence your hospitality would not shine for bright for the glory of the West Riding." The young squire tickled by this ironical observation, exclaimed, "O che burla!"——His mother eyed me in silence with a supercilious air; and the father of the feast, taking a bumper of October, "My service to you, cousin Bramble, (said he) I have alse ways heard there was something keen and biting in the air of the Welch mountains."

I was much pleased with the count de Melville. who is fenfible, eafy, and polite; and the countefs is the most amiable woman I ever beheld. In the afternoon they took leave of their entertainers, and the young gentleman, mounting his horfe, undertook to conduct their coach through the park, while one of their fervants rode round to give notice to the reft, whom they had left at a public house on the road. The moment their backs were turned, the cenforious damon took poffession of our Yorkshire landlady and our fister Tabitha The former observed, that the countess was a good fort of a body, but totally ignorant of good breeding, confequently aukward in her address. The 'Iquire faid he did not pretend to the breeding of any thing but colts; but that the jade would be very handsome, if she was a little more in flesh. " Handsome! (cried Tabby) she has indeed a pair " of black eyes without any meaning: but then "there is not a good feature in her face." "I "know not what you call good features in Wales, " (replied our landlord); but they'll pass in York-" fhire." Then turning to Liddy, he added, What " fay you, my pretty Red ftreak?-" is your opinion of the countefs?" " I think, " (cried

"(cried Liddy, with great emotion) she's an an"gel." labby chid her for talking with such freedom in company, and the lady of the house said, in a contemptuous tone, she supposed Miss had been brought up at some country boardingschool.

Our conversation was suddenly interrupted by the young gentleman, who galloped into the yard all aghaft, exclaiming, that the coach was attacked by a great number of highwaymen. My nephew and I rushing out, found his own and his fervant's horses ready faddled in the stable, with pistols in the cap. ----We mounted inftantly, ordering Clinker and Dutton to follow with all possible expedition; but notwithstanding all the speed we could make, the action was over before we arrived, and the count with his lady, fafe lodged at the house of Grieve, who had fignalized himfelf in a very remarkably manner on this occasion. At the turning of a lane, that led to the village where the count's fervant remained, a couple of robbers a-horseback suddenly appeared, with their piftols advanced: one kept the coachman in awe, and the other demanded the count's money, while the young 'fquire went off at full fpeed, without ever casting a look behind. The count defiring the thief to withdraw his piftol, as the lady was in great terror, delivered his purfe without making the least resistance : but not satisfied with this booty, which was pretty confiderable, the rafcal infifted upon rifling her of her ear rings and necklace, and the counters screamed with affright. Her husband, exasperated at the violence with which the was threatened, wrested the pistol out of the fellow's hand, and turning it upon him, fnapped it in his face; but the robber knowing there was no charge in it, drew another from his bosom, and in all probability would have killed him on the spot, had not his life been faved by a wonderful interpolition. Grieve, the apothecary, chancing to pass that very instant, ran up to the coach, and with a crab-flick, which was all the weapon he had, brought the fellow to the ground with the first blow; then seizing his pistol, presented it to his colleague, who fired his piece at random, and fled without further opposition. The other was tecured by the affittance of the count and the coachman; and his legs being tied under the belly of his own horse, Grieve conducted him to the village, whither also the carriage proceeded. It was with great difficulty the countels could be kept from fwooning; but at last she was happily conveyed to the house of the apothecary, who went into the shop to prepare some drops for her, while his wife and daughter administered to her in another apartment.

I found the count standing in the kitchen with the parson of the parish, and expressing whuch impatience to see his protector, whom as yet he had scarce found time to thank for the effential service he had done him and the countels. The daughter paffing at the same time with a glass of water. Monsieur de Melville could not help taking notice of her figure, which was strikingly engaging-" Ay, (faid the parson) the is the prettieft girl, "and the best girl in all my parish; and if I could " give my fon an estate of ten thousand a year, he " should have my consent to lay it at her feet. "If Mr Grieve has been as folicitous about get-"ting money, as he has been in performing all " the duties of a primitive Christian, Fy would not have hung fo long upon his hand." "What is her name?" faid I. " Sixteen years ago " (answered the vicar) I christened her by the "names of Seraphina Melvilia." " Ha! what! "how (cried the count eagerly) fure, you faid Vol. 1. " Seraphina

"Seraphina Melvilia." "I did; (said he) Mr. "Grieve told me those were the names of two mobile persons abroad to whom he had been obli" ged for more than life."

The count, without speaking another syllable, rushed into the parlour, crying, "This is your god-"daughter, my dear." Mrs Grieve than seizing the countess by the hand, exclaiming with great agitation, "O Madam!—O Sir!—I am—I am your poor Elinor. This is my Seraphina Melvilia.—O "child! these are the count and countess of Melville, "the generous—the glorious benefactors of thy once

"unhappy parents."

The countefs rifing from her feat, threw her arms about the neck of the amiable Seraphina, and clasped her to her breast with great tenderness, while the herfelf was embraced by the weeping This moving scene was compleated by the entrance of Grieve himself, who falling on his knees before the count, "Behold (faid he) a penitent, who at length can look upon his patron with-out shrinking." Ah, Ferdinand! (cried he, " raifing and folding him in his arms) the play-fel-" low of my infancy—the companion of my youth! Is it to you then I am indebted for my life?" "Heaven has heard my prayer (faid the other) " and given me an opportunity to prove myfelf not " altogether unworthy of your clemency and protect-"ion." He then kiffed the hand of the countefs, while Monfieur de Melville faluted his wife and lovely daughter, and all of us were greatly affected by this pathetic recognition.

In a word, Grieve was no other than Ferdinand Count Fathom, whose adventures were printed many years ago. Being a fincere convert to virtue, he had changed his name, that he might elude the inquiries of the count, whose generous allowance he determined to forego, that he might have no dependence but upon his own industry and moderation. He had accordingly fettled in this village as a practitioner in furgery and physic, and for some years wrestled with all the miseries of indigence; which, however, he and his wife had borne with the most exemplary refignation. At length, by dint of unwearied attention to the duties of his profession, which he exercifed with equal humanity and fuccess, he had acquired a tolerable there of bufiness among the farmers and common people which enabled him to live in a decent manner. He had been scarce ever seen to finile; was unaffectedly pious; and all the time he could spare from the avocations of his employment, he spent in educating his daughter, and in studying for his own improvement. In short, the adventurer Fathom was under the name of Grieve, univerfally respected among the commonalty of this district, as a prodigy of learning and virtue. These particulars I learned from the vicar, when we quitted the room, that they might be under no restraint in their mutual effusions. I make no doubt that Grieve will be pressed to leave off business, and reunite himself to the count's family; and as the counters feemed extremely fond of his daughter, the will, in all probability, infift upon Seraphina's accompanying her to Scotland.

Having paid our compliments to these noble perfons, we returned to the 'squire's, where we expected an invitation to pass the night, which was wer and raw; but, it seems, 'squire Burdock's hospitality reached not so far for the honour of Yorkshire: we therefore departed in the evening, and lay at an inn, where

I caught cold.

In hopes of riding it down before it could take fast hold on my constitution, I resolved to visit another relation, one Mr Pimpernel, who lived about a dozen miles from the place where we indeed.

Pimpernel,

Pimpernel, being the youngest of four fons, was bred an attorney at Furnival's inn; but all his elder brothers dying, he got himself called to the bar for the honour of his family, and foon after this preferment, fucceeded to his father's estate, which was very confiderable. He carried home with him all the knavish chicanery of the lowest pettifogger together with a wife whom he had purchased of a drayman for twenty pounds; and he foon found means to obtain a dedimus as an acting justice of peace. He is not only a fordid mifer in his disposition, but his avarice is mingled with a spirit of despotism, which is truly diabolical. He is a brutal hufband, an unnatural parent, a harsh master, an oppressive landlord, a litigious neighbour, and a partial magistrate. --Friends he has none; and in point of hospitality and good breeding, our cousin Burdock is a prince in comparison of this ungracious miscreant, whose house is the lively representation of a gaol. Our reception was suitable to the character I have sketched. Had it depended upon the wife, we should have been kindly treated. She is really a good fort of a woman, in spite of her low original, and well respected in the country; but the has not interest enough in her own house to command a draught of table beer, far less to bestow any kind of education on her children, who run about, like ragged colts, in a state of nature: Pox on him! he is such a dirty fellow, that I have not patience to profecute the fubject.

rigate water heated for the purpose. If I could hardly bear the smell of a single tumbler when cold, you may guess how my nose was regaled by the steam, arising from a hot bath of the same fluid. At night I was conducted into a dark hole on the ground floor, where the tub smoaked and stunk like the pot of Acheron, in one corner, and in another stood a dirty bed provided with thick blankets, in which I was to sweat after coming out of the bath My heart seemed to die within me when I entered this dismal bagnio, and found my brain assaulted by such unsufferable effluvia.—I cursed Micklewhimmen, for not considering that my organs were formed on this side of the Tweed; but being ashamed to recoil upon the threshold, I submitted to the process.

After having endured all but real fuffocation for above a quarter of an hour in the tub, I was moved to the bed and wrapped in blankets-There I lay a full hour panting with intolerable heat; but not the least moisture appearing on my skin, I was carried to my own chamber, and paffed the night without clofing an eye, in such a flutter of spirits as rendered me the most miserable wretch in being. I should certainly have run distracted, if the rarefaction of my blood, occasioned by that Stygian bath, had not burst the veffels, and produced a voilent hamorrhage, which, though dreadful and alarming, removed the horrible. disquiet. ___ I lost two pounds of blood, and more. on this occasion; and find myfeir still weak and languid; but, I believe, a little exercise will forward my recovery; and therefore I am reloived to let out tomorrow for York, in my way to Scarborough, where I propose to brace my fibres by fea-bathing, which, I know is one of your favourite specifics. There is, however, one difeafe, for which you have found as yet no specific, and that is old age, of which this tedious unconnected epistle is an infallible symptom: - what, therefore, cannot be cured, must be endured, by you, as well as by

Yours,

Harrigate, June 26.

MATT. BRAMBLE.

To Sir WATKIN PHILLIPS, Bart. of Jesus College, Oxon.

DEAR KNIGHT. THE manner of living at Harrigate was fo agreeable to my disposition, that I left the place with some regret --- Our aunt Tabby would have probably made some objection to our departing to foon had not an accident embroiled her with Mr Micklewhimmen, the Scots advocate, on whose heart she had been practifing, from the fecond day after our arrival-That original, though feemingly precluded from the use of his limbs, had turned his genius to a good account _____In fhort, by dint of groaning, and whining, he had excited the compassion of the company so effectually, that an old lady, who occupied the very best apartment in the house, gave it up for his ease and convenience. When his man led him into the Long Room, all the females were immediately in commotion-One fet an elbow-chair; another shook up the cushion; a third brought a stool; and a fourth a pillow, for the accommodation of his feet _____Two ladies (of whom Tabby was always one) supported him into the dining-room, and placed him properly ly at the table; and his taste was indulged with a succession of delicacies, culled by their fair hands. All this attention he repaid with a profusion of compliments and benedictions, which were not the less agreeable for being delivered in the Scottish dialect. As for Mrs Tabitha, his respects were particularly addressed to her, and he did not fail to mingle them with religious reslections, touching free grace, knowing her bias to be Methodism, which he also profes-fed upon a calviniftical model.

For my part, I could not help thinking this lawyer was not fuch an invalid as he pretended to be. 1 obferved he eat very heartily three times a-day; and though his bottle was marked ftomachie tincture, he had recourse to it so often, and seemed to swallow it with fuch peculiar relish, that I suspected it was not compounded in the apothecary's shop, or the chemist's laboratory. One day, while he was in earnest difcourse with Mrs Tabitha, and his servant had gone out on fome occasion or other, I dexterously exchanged the labels, and fituation of his bottle and mine; and having tafted his tincture, found it was excellent I forthwith handed it about to fome of my neighbours, and it was quite emptied before Mr Micklewhimmen had occasion to repeat his draught. At length, turning about, he took hold of my bottle instead of his own, and, filling a large glass, drank to the health of Mrs Tabitha -- It had fcarce touched his lips, when he perceived the change which had been put upon him, and was at first a little out of countenance. He seemed to retire within himself, in order to deliberate, and in half a minute his resolution was taken; addressing himself to our quarter, "I give the gentleman cradit for his wit (faid "he); it was a gude practical joke; but fometimes " bi joci in seria ducunt mala____ I hope, for " his own fake, he has na drank all the liccor; for " it " it was a vara poorful infusion of jallap in Bourdeaux wine: as its possible he may ha ta'en sic a dose as will produce a terrible catastrophe in his ainbooels."——

By far the greater part of the contents had fallen. to the share of a young clothier from Leeds, who had come to make a figure at Harrigate, and was, in effect, a great coxcomb in his way. It was with a view to laugh at his fellow guefts, as well as to mortify the lawyer that he had emptied the bottle, when it came. to his turn, and he had laughed accordingly: but now his mirth gave way to his apprehension. He. began to fpit, to make wry faces, and writhe himfelf into various contorfions ___ " Damn the stuff! (cried he) I thought it had a villianous twang ___ pah ! " He that would cozen a Scot, mun get oop be .: nes, and take Old Scratch for his counfellor-" " Introth, mester what d'ye ca'um, (replied the lawyer) " your wit has run you into a filthy puddle-I'm. or truly confarned for your waeful cafe ___ The best. " advice I can give you in sic a dilemma, is to " fend an express to Rippon for doctor Wangh. " without delay; and, in the mean time, fwallow. se all the oil and butter you can find in the hoofe to " defend your poor stomach and intastines from the " villication of the particles of the jallap, which " is very violent, even when taken in modera-" ration."

The poor clothier's torments had already begun: He retired, roaring with pain, to his own chamber; the oil was swallowed, and the doctor sent for; but before he arrived, the miserable patient had made such discharges upwards and downwards, that nothing remained to give him surther offence; and this double evacuation was produced by imagination alone; for what he had drank was genuine wine of Bourdeaux, which the lawyer had brought brought from Scotland for his own private use. The clothier finding the joke turn out so expensive and disagreeable, quitted the house next morning, leaving the triumph to Micklewhimmen, who enjoyed it internally, without any outward signs of exultation; on the contrary, he affected to pity the young man for what he had suffered, and acquired fresh credit from this shew of moderation.

It was about the middle of the night, which fucceeded this adventure, that the vent of the kitchen chimney being foul, the foot took fire, and the alarm was given in a dreadful manner. Every body leaped naked out of bed, and in a minute the whole house was filled with cries and confusion ____ There were two stairs in the house, and to these we naturally ran; but they were both fo blocked up by the people preffing one upon another that it fee ned impossible to pass, without throwing down and trampling upon the women. In the midst of this anarchy, Mr Micklewhimmen, with a leather portmanteau on his back, came running as nimbly as a buck along the paffage; and Tabby, in her under-petticoat, endeavouring to hook him under the arm, that the might escape through his protection, he very fairly pushed her down, crying, " Na, na, gude faith, charity begins " at hame!" Without paying the least respect to the thricks and intreaties of his female friends, he charged through the midst of the crowd, overturning every thing that opposed him, and actually fought his way to the bottom of the stair cafe-By this time Clinker had found a ladder, by which he entered the window of my uncle's champer, where our family was affembled, and proposed that we should make our exit sucestively by that conveyance. The 'fquire exhorted his fifter to begin the descent; but, before she could resolve, ser woman, Mrs Winifred Jenkins, in a transport of terror.

At that inftant the landlord of the house called out with an audible voice, that the fire was extinguished, and the ladies had nothing further to fear: this was a welcome note to the audience, and produced an immediate effect; the shrieking ceased, and a confused found of expostulation ensued. I conducted Mrs Tabitha and my fifter to their own chamber, where Liddy fainted away; but was foon brought to herfelf. Then I went to offer my fervice to the other ladies, who might want affiftance They were all fouddling through the passage to their several apartments; and as the thorough fair was lighted by two lamps, I had a pretty good observation of them in their transit; but, as most of them were naked to the smock, and all their heads shrowded in huge night-caps, I could not diftinguish one face from another, though I recognized fome of their voices Thefe were generally plaintive; fome wept, fome scolded, and fome prayed-I lifted up one poor old gentlewoman, who had been overturned and fore bruifed by a multitude of feet; and this was also the case with the lame parfon from Northumberland, whom Micklewhimmen had in his paffage overthrown, though not with impunity;

punity; for the cripple, in falling, gave him fuch a good pelt on the head with his crutch, that the blood followed.

As for this lawyer, he waited below till the hurley-burly was over, and then stole foftly to his own chamber, from whence he did not venture to make a fecond fally till eleven in the forenoon, when he was led into the public room by his own fervant and another affiftant, groaning most worfully, with a bloody napkin round his head. But things were greatly altered-The selfish brutality of his behaviour on the stairs had steeled their hearts against all his arts and address. - Not a foul offered to accomodate him with a chair, cushion, or footftool; fo that he was obliged to fit down on a hard wooden bench-In that position, he looked around with a rueful aspect, and, bowing very low, faid, in a whining tone, "Your most humble fer-" vant, ladies-Fire is a dreadful calamity. " Fire purifies gold, and, it tries friendship, (cried " Mrs Tabitha, bridling,)" "Yea, Madam, (replied "Micklewhimmen, and it trieth discretion also-" "If difcretion confifts in forfaking a triend in ad-« verfity, you are eminently possessed of that vir-" tue (resumed our aunt.)" "Na Madam, re-"joined the advocate) well I wot I cannot claim " any merit from the mode of my retreat ___ Ye'll " pleafe to observe, ladies, there are two independent principles that actuate our nature One " is instinct, which we have in common with the "brute creation, and the other is reason-Noo, " in certain great emergencies, when the faculty of " reason is suspended, instinct takes the lead, and, " when this predominates, having no affinity with " reason, it pays no fort of regard to its connect-"ions; it only operates for the preservation of the "individual, and that by the most expeditious and " effectual means; therefore, begging your pardon, " ladies.

" ladies, I'm no accountable in foro conscientia, for what I did, while under the influence of this irre-

" fistible poorer."

Here my uncle interposed, "I should be glad to " know (faid he) whether it was instinct that " prompted you to retreat with bag and baggage; " for I think, you had a portmanteau on your shoul-" der___" The lawyer answered, without hesita-" tion, "Gif I might tell my mind freely, without " incurring the fuspicion of presumption, I should "think it was fomething superior to either reason or " instinct which suggested that measure, and this on " a twafald account: in the first place, the portman-" teau contained the writings of a worthy nobleman's "estate; and their being burned would have occa-" fioned a lofs that could not be repaired; fecondly. "my good angel feems to have laid my portmantle " on my shoulders, by way of defence, to sustain the " violence of a most inhuman blow, from the crutch " of a reverend clergyman; which even in spite of that medium, hath wounded me forely, even unto " the pericranium." " By your own doctrine, (cried-"the parson who chanced to be present) I am or not accountable for the blow, which was the ef-" fect of inftinct." " I crave your pardon, reve-" rend Sir, (faid the other) inflinct never acts but of for the preservation of the individual; but your or prefervation was out of the case ____You "had already received the damage, and therefore " the blow must be imputed to revenge, which is " a finful paffion, that ill becomes any Christian, " especially a Protestant divine; and let me tell "you, most reverend doctor, gin I had a mind " to plea, the law would hauld my libel relevant." "Why, the damage is pretty equal on both fides " (cried the parson): your head is broke, and my " crutch is fnapped in the middle____Now, if you es will will repair the one, I will be at the expence of

" curing the other."

This fally raifed the laugh against Micklewhimmen, who began to look grave; when my uncle, in order to change the discourse, observed, that instinct had been very kind to him in another respect; for it had restored to him the use of his limbs, which, in his exit, he had moved with furprifing agility. He replied, that it was the nature of fear to brace up the nerves : and mentioned tome furprising feats of strength and activity performed by persons under the impulse of terror; but he complained, that in his own particular, the effects had ceased, when the cause was taken away -The 'squire faid he would lay a tea-drinking on his head, that he should dance a Scots measure, without making a falfe step; and the advocate grinning, called for the piper. A fiddler being at hand, this original started up, with his bloody napkin over his black tyeperiwig, and acquitted himfelf in fuch a manner, as excited the mirth of the whole company; but he could not regain the good graces of Mrs Tabby, who did not understand the principle of instinct; and the lawyer did not think it worth his while to proceed to further demonstration.

From Harrigate we came hither, by the way of York, and here we shall tarry some days, as my uncle and Tabitha are both resolved to make use of the waters. Scarborough, though a paltry town, is romantic, from its situation along a cliss that overhangs the sea. The harbour is formed by a small elbow of land that runs out as a natural mole, directly opposite to the town; and on that side is the castle, which stands very high, of considerable extent, and, before the invention of gunpowder, was counted impregnable. At the other end of Scarborough are two public rooms for the Vol. I.

nse of the company who refort to this place in the fummer, to drink the waters and bathe in the fea; and the diversions are pretty much on the same footing here as at Bath. The Spa is a little way beyond the town on this fide, under a cliff, within a few paces of the fea, and thither the drinkers go every morning in dishabille; but the descent is by a great number of steps, which invalids find very inconvenient. Betwixt the well and the harbour, the bathing machines are ranged along the beach, with all their proper utenfils and attendants-You have never feen one of these machines - Imagine to yourfelf a fmall, Inug, wooden chamber, fixed upon a wheeled-carriage, having a door at each end, and on each fide a little window above, a bench below-The bather, afcending into this apartment by wooden steps, shuts himself in, and begins to undress, while the attendant yokes a horse to the end next to the fea, and draws the carriage forwards, till the furface of the water is on a level with the floor of the dreffing room, then he moves and fixes the horse to the other end-The person within, being stripped. opens the door to the fea ward, where he finds the guide ready, and plunges headlong into the water .-After having bathed, he reascends into the apartment by the steps which had been shifted for that purpose, and puts on his clothes at his leifure, while the carriage is drawn back again upon the dry land; fo that he has nothing further to do, but to open the door, and come down as he went up-Should he be for weak or ill as to require a fervant to put off and on his clothes, there is room enough in the apartment for half a dozen people. The guides who attend the ladies in the water, are of their own fex, and they and the female bathers have a dress of flammel for the fea; nay, they are provided with other conveniencies for the support of decorum. A certain number of the machines are fitted with tilts, that project from the feaward ends of them, fo as to screen the bathers from the view of all persons whatsoever-The beach is admirably adapted for this practice, the defcent being gently gradual, and the fand foft as velvet; but then the machines can only be used at a certain time of the tide, which varies every day; fo that fometimes the bathers are obliged to rife very early in the morning -For my part, I love swimming as an exercise, and enjoy it at all times of the tide, without the formality of an apparatus. You and I have often plunged together in the Isis; but the sea is a much more noble bath, for health as well as pleasure. You cannot conceive what a flow of spirits it gives, and how it braces every finew of the human frame .- Were I to enumerate half the difeafes which are every day curing by fea-bathing, you might justly fay you had received a treatife, instead of a letter, from

and fervant,

Scarborough, July 1.
